

ALL THINGS DUSK

Z.G. TOMASZEWSKI

Hong Kong University Press
The University of Hong Kong
Pokfulam Road
Hong Kong
www.hkupress.org

© 2015 Hong Kong University Press

ISBN 978-988-8208-82-1

All rights reserved. No portion of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopy, recording, or any information storage or retrieval system, without prior permission in writing from the publisher.

British Library Cataloguing-in-Publication Data
A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

Epigraph in the front matter: "Trying to Pray" from The Branch Will Not Break © 2007 by James Wright. Reprinted with permission of Wesleyan University Press (www.wesleyan.edu/wespress).

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

Printed and bound by Hang Tai Printing Co., Ltd. in Hong Kong, China

CONTENTS

I.

The Soul	3
The Composer Sheds Her Sheet Music	4
Day of the Dying Apples	5
Two Chairs Under an Apple Tree	6
Loss	8
Poem for Roger Allen	9
Sound, Freckle, Cluster, Lake Light	10
Summer Song of Lake Michigan	11
Yesterday's Tide	13
Lessen	16
"A Gypsy Baby"	18
Bat	19
First Evening, Mooselung Pond	20
Becoming One of Them that I Hear in the Evening	21
Night Bard	22
Not Wanting This Poem To Be About Me	23
Bear	24

II.

Flesh and Blood	27
Running Naked	29
If I Last the Night	31
A Fable	32
Morning	33
Dow's Crossing	34
Noon by Mooselung Pond	36
Butterfly Bush	37
Heron	38
Salad of Sorts	39
Dragonfly of Milkweed Manor	40
Dead Deer	42
Garlic Harvest	43
My Grandfather Chopping Wood	44
Pinecone	46
Silencing the Crickets	47

III.

Farmland	51
Drinking Mead with John, Bowen, and Evan	52
Yellow-Bellied Sapsucker	53
The Poet in the Pinewoods	54
Correction	55
A Storm Divided	57
Still Life Broken By Rain	58
Meditation	59
Minnows	60
Kingfisher of Mooselung Pond	61
Blackberry	62
Summer Afternoon	63
Big Bang as Seen on a Chrysanthemum Stone	65
Argument	66
Mooselung Pond, Sunset: Autumn's Arrival	67
Birch	68
Again, My Grandfather Chops Wood	69
Looking Out the Window with a Spider Web	70
Destination	71

Manifest	72
Becoming an Astronaut	74
Sleep	75
Notes	77
Acknowledgements	81
About the HKU International Poetry Prize	85

The Soul

You can hear wind echo
over water and the loose rhythm from the well of the pine warbler's chest a trill growing out from the trowel of its beak

You can nearly see the shape the song takes as it loops down gravity-bound following the brook through the sleeves of balsam fir

freeing south—

the source being carried back

You are the rambling sound of what fills a song

From silence we spill
and silence we fall

Loss

You watch the yellow lace unwind from a young girl's hair while the mirage on the road wavers.

You replay the day your daughter died: glittered gold streamers whirling from handlebars as she was riding her bicycle, totter of training wheels tipping to keep balance, but the hill's loose gravel and a guy driving distracted by your wife's summer dress.

At dusk all the colors quickly roll into the grave of night, and come dawn they return, but one always seems etched inside the eye.

The sun spools behind the hill, the girl tries to secure it, but wind catches the lace, flings it across the horizon.

Flesh and Blood

Trees and buildings become islands in the morning mist, the valley a strand of clouds like a scarf frayed at its edges.

When I return to the house I search a closet for the doeskin mittens my grandfather made from the first deer he hunted, instead find the cap my grandmother knitted and a felt shawl she'd sewn, and hang them on a nail near the door—a nail found in an old maple, the one from which sweetness used to run, removed and brought inside after many years retired.
It was the nail on which he hung his rifle.

I imagine the deer: hooves clomping through the woods, no fear so near to death—death: the unknown forest.

And I consider my grandfather, cold and hungry, quiet, waiting.
I think of the fog that must have surrounded them,
each an island in their own existence brought together by something small and fast—a nail to the heart.

I think to check by the wood furnace and there, under a cloud of cinder, the mittens lay.
I steal them up, dust the soot off, clap them against the house's exterior sending woodash to swirl like snow.

Heron

The old fisherman balances himself against the wind on one leg, the other folded, tucked to his torso; with a pole he fishes—its beak shovels at sand, digging, water wells up and lug-worms lured in: the trowel of his bill filled.

Drinking Mead with John, Bowen, and Evan

We stand around the chicken coop passing the unlabeled glass bottle from one sod-grimy hand to another. John watches a hen as Bowen recalls the Hardwick Memorial Day Parade of 1996:
old men wearing popcorn-bucket hats driving three-wheelers in drunken pattern; floats rolling by with people throwing candy to the curb

Who has any idea what they were pitching?
and the marching band that lagged a quarter-mile behind, that could've used help from a vehicle Maybe they should've been on a float to begin with while they chased after the last truck shouting through their instruments as they went.
This is when they met, John and Bowen. Evan edges near the lone chick, distancing himself from the conversation, but before long re-enters the group to take another pull—

“Where’s it from, the mead?”

“Fell off the back of a truck” John says.

Blackberry

Purple thimble body, colors sewn
from midnight to dawn,
all dimple and cheek,
brown stubble needling out;
hanging here, late August,
knit by the sun's spinning-wheel, plump, little sponge
weaving the fabric of water;
I sheer the green thread of your stem, you unravel
from the tangles of vine, spool into hand;
as I turn from the bush I see,
like a knotted ball of black yarn,
the bear at a distance,
her body, thankfully,
stitched to sleep—
full from the facts of this fruitful earth.

Poems in this book premiered in the pages of the following:

Architrave Press: “The Soul”

Avocet: “Bear,” “Body of Birch,” and “Morning Meditation”

Balloons Literary Journal: “Argument”

Carbon Culture Review: “Looking Out the Window with a Spider Web”

The Citron Review: “Kingfisher of Mooselung Pond”

Cold Mountain Review: “Yellow-Bellied Sapsucker”

Fogged Clarity: “Loss”

I-70 Review: “Dow’s Crossing”

Lalitamba: “Summer Afternoon”

The MacGuffin: “The Composer Sheds Her Sheet Music”

The Meadow: “Two Chairs Under an Apple Tree”

Muse: “Summer Song of Lake Michigan”

Parabola: “First Evening, Mooselung Pond,” “Dragonfly of Milkweed Manor,” “Garlic Harvest,” “My Grandfather Chopping Wood,” and “Manifest”

Scintilla: “Becoming One of Them that I Hear in the Evening”

Southword Journal: “Butterfly Bush”

Talking River: “Poem for Roger Allen”

Three-Legged Stool (The Clare Champion): “Heron”

Through the 3rd Eye: “Pinecone”

“Summer Song of Lake Michigan” was awarded second place in The Michigan Poet’s ekphrastic contest for which it appeared as a broadside. Tip of the cap to Foster Neill.

Great, relentless thanks to Li-Young Lee for selecting this book for publication. I must weave you a nest for the doves of your life.

ABOUT THE HKU INTERNATIONAL POETRY PRIZE

The HKU International Poetry Prize, initiated by the School of English at the University of Hong Kong in 2010, is an international award recognizing outstanding poetry written in English. Judged by renowned poets, it celebrates a body of original work in a first book of poems published by Hong Kong University Press. The HKU International Poetry Prize looks to the history of poems and honors the craft and achievement of contemporary poets. We pay special tribute this year to Ms. Aarti Hemnani, Creative Studio and HKU Black Box Theatre manager; Mr. Eric Mok, acquisitions editor at the HKU Press; and the HKU Cultural & Humanities Fund for their generous support and dedication to the HKU International Poetry Prize.

Page Richards
Chair of HKU International Poetry Prize
Associate Professor
School of English
The University of Hong Kong