

Contemporary Hong Kong Government and Politics

Expanded Second Edition

Edited by

Lam Wai-man

Percy Luen-tim Lui

Wilson Wong

香港大學出版社

HONG KONG UNIVERSITY PRESS

Hong Kong University Press
14/F Hing Wai Centre
7 Tin Wan Praya Road
Aberdeen
Hong Kong
www.hkupress.org

© Hong Kong University Press 2007, 2012
First published 2007
Expanded second edition 2012

ISBN 978-988-8139-47-7

All rights reserved. No portion of this publication may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopy, recording, or any information storage or retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publisher.

British Library Cataloguing-in-Publication Data
A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library.

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

Printed and bound by Condor Production Ltd., Hong Kong, China

Contents

Contributors	vii
Acronyms and Abbreviations	xi
Chapter 1 Political Context Lam Wai-man	1
Part I: Political Institutions	23
Chapter 2 The Executive Li Pang-kwong	27
Chapter 3 The Legislature Percy Luen-tim Lui	45
Chapter 4 The Judiciary Benny Y.T. Tai	67
Chapter 5 The Civil Service Wilson Wong	87
Chapter 6 District Councils, Advisory Bodies, and Statutory Bodies Jermain T.M. Lam	111
PART II: Mediating Institutions and Political Actors	133
Chapter 7 Mobilization and Conflicts over Hong Kong's Democratic Reform Sing Ming and Tang Yuen-sum	137

Chapter 8	Political Parties and Elections Ma Ngok	159
Chapter 9	Civil Society Elaine Y.M. Chan	179
Chapter 10	Political Identity, Culture, and Participation Lam Wai-man	199
Chapter 11	Mass Media and Public Opinion Joseph M. Chan and Francis L.F. Lee	223
PART III: Policy Environment		247
Chapter 12	Economic Policy Wilson Wong and Raymond Yuen	251
Chapter 13	Changes in Social Policy in Hong Kong since 1997: Old Wine in New Bottles? Wong Hung	277
Chapter 14	Urban Policy James Lee	297
PART IV: Political Environment		323
Chapter 15	The Changing Relations between Hong Kong and the Mainland since 2003 Peter T.Y. Cheung	325
Chapter 16	Hong Kong and the World Ting Wai and Ellen Lai	349
Conclusion: Looking to the Future The Editors		371
Index		381

Contributors

Elaine Y.M. CHAN is research assistant professor at the Centre for Civil Society and Governance and the Department of Politics and Public Administration, The University of Hong Kong. Her major research interests include civil society, political culture and identities, and cultural sociology.

Joseph M. CHAN is professor of journalism and communication at The Chinese University of Hong Kong where he once served as director. His research interests lie in the intersection of international communication, political communication, and journalism studies. His recent co-authored publications include Media, Social Mobilization, and Mass Protests in Post-Colonial Hong Kong (Routledge, 2011), and Policies for a Sustainable Development of Hong Kong Film Industry (HKIASP, CUHK, 2010).

Peter T.Y. CHEUNG is associate professor, director of the Master of Public Administration Programme, and former head of the Department of Politics and Public Administration, The University of Hong Kong. His research interests focus on the relations between the central government and the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, the management of cross-boundary cooperation in south China and the politics of policymaking in Hong Kong. He is also a former consultant, part-time member, and research and planning director of the Central Policy Unit of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region government.

Ellen LAI obtained her Bachelor of Arts degree majoring in English from The University of Hong Kong in 2002. She furthered her studies in the Department of Government and International Studies in Hong Kong Baptist University and attained a Master of Philosophy degree in 2005. She started as a journalist at the Hong Kong Economic Times and the Commercial Radio and is now developing her career in the business sector.

Jermain T.M. LAM is associate professor at the City University of Hong Kong. His teaching and research interests are political development and changes in transitional societies. He has lectured and published in the areas of electoral politics, party politics, political culture, executive-legislative relations, democratization, and public sector reforms.

LAM Wai-man is assistant professor at The University of Hong Kong. Her major research interests include identity politics, political culture and participation, democratization and civil society. She is the author of Understanding the Political Culture of Hong Kong: The Paradox of Activism and Depoliticization (M.E. Sharpe, 2004), and editor of Contemporary Hong Kong Politics (Hong Kong University Press, 2007), and has published in The China Quarterly, Citizenship Studies, and elsewhere.

Francis L.F. LEE (PhD, Stanford University, 2003) is associate professor at the School of Journalism and Communication, The Chinese University of Hong Kong. He is the lead author of Media, Social Mobilization and Mass Protests in Post-Colonial Hong Kong (Routledge, 2011), and co-editor of Media and Politics in Post-Handover Hong Kong (Routledge, 2008). He is also associate editor of the Chinese Journal of Communication.

James LEE obtained his doctorate in housing policy at the School for Policy Studies, University of Bristol. He has been involved in comparative housing and urban research since the 1990s. His publications include: (eds) The Crisis of Welfare in East Asia (US: Lexington Press, 2007), and (eds) Housing and Social Change: East West Perspectives (UK: Routledge, 2003). His articles also appear in international journals, including Urban Studies, Urban Policy & Research, and Economic Geography & Housing Studies. He is a founder of the Asian Pacific Network of Housing Research.

LI Pang-kwong received his PhD from the London School of Economics and Political Science, University of London. He is associate professor at the Department of Political Science and concurrently the founding director of the Public Governance Programme at Lingnan University. His major research areas include: voting behaviour and electoral politics, legislative studies, governance and institutional design.

Percy Luen-tim LUI is assistant professor at the School of Arts and Social Sciences, The Open University of Hong Kong. He received his PhD in public administration from the Center for Public Administration and Policy, Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University. His research interests include public policy analysis, bureaucratic responsibility, comparative public administration and public administration theory.

MA Ngok is currently associate professor at the Department of Government and Public Administration, The Chinese University of Hong Kong. His research areas include party politics and elections in Hong Kong, state-society relations in Hong Kong, comparative politics, and democratization.

He is the author of Political Consequences of Electoral Laws: The Hong Kong Proportional Representation System (City University Press, 2003), and Political Development in Hong Kong: State, Political Society and Civil Society (Hong Kong University Press, 2007).

SING Ming is associate professor at the Division of Social Science, the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology. His research focuses on comparative democratization, democracy and governance, as well as Hong Kong politics. He has published in the Journal of Politics, Journal of Democracy, Democratization, Social Indicators Research, Government and Opposition, among others. He has also written and edited four books on Hong Kong politics.

Benny Y.T. TAI was born and educated in Hong Kong. In 1991, he joined the Department of Law of The University of Hong Kong as a lecturer/assistant professor and is now associate professor in law. He specializes in constitutional law, administrative law, human rights law, and law and religion. His current research projects include rule of law and legal culture, political legitimacy and constitutional development, governance and law, law and religion.

TANG Yuen-sum is a research student at the Hong Kong University of Science and Technology and a researcher of a local non-governmental organization (NGO). She was a part-time lecturer at the Department of Public and Social Administration of the City University of Hong Kong, where she got her Bachelor's degree in policy studies and administration. Her research interest is on democratization and democracy movement in Hong Kong.

TING Wai obtained his doctorate in political science and international relations from the University of Paris-X (Nanterre). Formerly research fellow at the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies, Singapore, he is now professor at the Department of Government and International Studies, Hong Kong Baptist University. His major research interests include domestic and foreign policies of China, and theories of international relations.

WONG Hung is associate professor at the Department of Social Work, The Chinese University of Hong Kong. His research interests include labour, social security, and poverty issues. In recent years, he has actively participated in advocating community economy development in Hong Kong and the setting up of universal pension system. He is now the chairperson of UNISON and the Employment and Social Security Committee of the Hong Kong Council of Social Service.

Wilson WONG is associate professor at the Department of Government and Public Administration and associate director of the Public Policy Research Centre at The Chinese University of Hong Kong. His core research areas include public management, public budgeting and finance, and Hong Kong politics. His works have been published in major journals of public administration including Governance, Journal of Public Administration Research and Theory, and Public Administration Review.

Raymond YUEN is a PhD candidate at the Department of Government and Public Administration, The Chinese University of Hong Kong. His thesis examines the agencification of the public sector in Hong Kong. In 2010, he was a student fellow of the Asia Pacific Leadership Program at the East-West Center in Honolulu. He has also worked as an intern in the Democratic Governance Team of United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) China in 2011.

Chapter 1

Political Context

Lam Wai-man

Following China's military defeat at the hands of Britain in the first and second Opium Wars (1839–42 and 1856–60), Hong Kong was placed under British colonial rule. It was within this context that Hong Kong experienced World War I, World War II, postwar refugee influxes, the embargo on young Communist China in the 1950s, two significant riots in the 1960s, and an economic upswing in the 1970s. By the time of China's resumption of sovereignty on 1 July 1997, in accordance with the Sino-British Joint Declaration, Hong Kong had become one of the world's leading cities.

The first chief executive (CE), Tung Chee-hwa, launched the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region (HKSAR) administration by setting up grand development plans for the city and producing commitments to these plans. From a pledge to resolve housing needs by providing 85,000 housing units each year to proposals for a Cyberport science park and a Chinese medicine centre, Tung attempted to institute longer-term visions for a city renowned for transience and pragmatism. Unfortunately, many of these plans or policies were derailed or modified because of objective problems or reluctance among the people of Hong Kong, who were either not ready or of a different mind from Tung. Various crises, ranging from economic to epidemiological, plagued the city during his term in office.

Economically, Hong Kong suffered from the Asian financial crisis, which began in Thailand soon after Hong Kong's handover in July 1997, and generated a period of economic turbulence and decline in the city. The unemployment rate (not seasonally adjusted) rose from 4.7% in 1998 to 7.9% in 2003, though by September 2005 it had fallen back to 5.7%. If economic prosperity had served the colonial government well as a buffer against political challenges, the Tung administration was not so fortunate. Furthermore, social inequalities appear to have increased over the years. The Gini coefficient, commonly used to indicate income inequality, is a value between 0 and 1 with 0 representing a state of absolute equality and 1 of absolute inequality. In Hong Kong, it went up from 0.518 in 1996 to 0.525 in 2001, ranking the city above only 16 developing countries in South America and Africa (World Bank 2001, Table 2.8).

In terms of politics, it is commonly believed that political space in Hong Kong has been greatly constricted since 1997. For example, attempts of the HKSAR government to legislate Article 23 of the Basic Law, Hong Kong's mini-constitution, were widely perceived as having negative effects on individual freedom and subsequently aroused substantial public controversy. The arguments culminated in a demonstration on 1 July 2003, in which half a million Hong Kong people took to the streets to voice their grievances. People accused the government of missteps leading to Hong Kong's economic decline, deterioration of the rule of law, and sluggish development of democratization. Data collected by the Civic Exchange showed that in June 1997, 66% of respondents were satisfied with the overall performance of the government. Satisfaction then plunged to 30% in August 2000, and to 20% in November 2003 (Civic Exchange 2004, Tables 9 & 10). Added to these difficulties were some unprecedented health considerations, notably the Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS), which exposed the government's inability to cope with crises and a lack of coordination between departments.

On 10 March 2005, while Hong Kong appeared to be well on the road to economic recovery, rumours about Tung's resignation for health reasons were finally confirmed. By gaining the nomination of more than 700 members of the 800-member Election Committee (EC) that is entrusted with electing the CE under the Basic Law, Donald Yam-kuen Tsang, formerly chief secretary of the HKSAR government and, as commonly called, a "long-term old battery" of the Hong Kong colonial government, replaced Tung as the second CE without competition. In 2007, Tsang was re-elected to a second term, to last up to 2012.

Having been a civil servant for almost 40 years, Tsang is renowned for his pragmatic governance. He pronounced his aims as delivering strong governance and promoting progressive development, which were to be realized by promoting economic development, pushing ahead large scale infrastructural projects, reducing the energy intensity of Hong Kong, promoting community development and social harmony, and resolving the problems of Hong Kong's democratic development during his term of office. From 2005, Hong Kong's economy, which was adversely affected by the global financial crisis in 2008 and 2009, has entered the stage of recovery. Over the past few years, unemployment rates have been maintained at about 4%. Undoubtedly, Tsang has been luckier than Tung with the support of a more favourable economic environment for his governance. Nevertheless, the Gini coefficients have remained high with a score of 0.488 in 2006, 0.428 in 2007, 0.533 in 2008, 0.432 in 2009, and 0.535 in 2010. The percentage of people who felt very satisfied and quite satisfied with the overall performance of the HKSAR government has also gradually decreased from 49.6% in January 2006 to 22% in August 2011 (Hong Kong University Public Opinion Poll (HKUPOP)), which are worrying signs. This chapter outlines the general context of changes in Hong Kong since 1997 and lays out the volume's structure and each chapter's materials.

Sino-British negotiations and the Basic Law

Negotiations between China and Britain about the sovereignty transfer began informally in 1979, when Hong Kong Governor Murray Maclehoose made an official visit to Beijing. In 1984, the two countries signed a Joint Declaration stating that the British administration of Hong Kong would end in 1997. Hong Kong would become a special administrative region under Chinese sovereignty without British intervention. In addition, its way of life, system of laws, and justice would be maintained for at least 50 years. A Sino-British Joint Liaison Group was subsequently established to ensure the effective implementation of the Joint Declaration. In 1990, the Basic Law was promulgated, restating the principles of "high autonomy" and the unprecedented model of "one country, two systems" for ruling Hong Kong (Box 1.1). The general framework of governance laid down by the Basic Law is highly similar to the colonial government's: continuing elitist rule, executive-led government, laissez-faire economic policy, a capitalistic way of life, protection of individual freedoms, and limited democracy (Box 1.2). The belief enshrined in the Basic Law is that there is much value in the colonial legacy, which includes clinging to the social goals of stability and prosperity, administrative efficiency, political neutrality of civil servants, the rule of law, and gradual political reforms. The interesting question for post-1997 governance is to what extent "one country, two systems" can be successful given the legacy and the constraints of the Basic Law.

Although the Central People's Government (CPG) of the People's Republic of China (PRC) planned to maintain stability and continuity in both pre-handover and post-handover governance in Hong Kong by promulgating the Basic Law, its plans were interrupted by the arrival of Chris Patten as Hong Kong Governor in 1992. Patten made significant political and administrative reforms in response to citizens' demands for quality governance, which also indirectly resonated with the people's desires for democracy. For example, government departments and agencies were required to publish annual performance pledges to enhance their accountability to citizens. Also, in the 1995 Legislative Council (LegCo) election, Patten deliberately redefined the functional constituencies (FCs), making more than 1.1 million individuals eligible to vote. In the 1991 election, only around 70,000 people had been able to vote in the FCs. China viewed all of these proto-democratic moves with concern. As tensions heightened in 1996, China appointed a Provisional LegCo, which soon reversed all of Patten's pro-democratic reforms that they viewed with suspicion.

Relations with China

Since the handover, the principle of high autonomy has been basically respected and the Hong Kong people's trust of the CPG is high. When asked whether they were satisfied with the performance of the CPG in dealing with Hong Kong affairs, 45% of the respondents expressed satisfaction in June 1997, 68% in June 1998, and even amidst the Article 23 controversies in mid-2003, the CPG still enjoyed a satisfaction rate of 57% (Civic Exchange 2004, Table 38). Other polls conducted by the Hong Kong Institute of Asia-Pacific Studies showed that, in 2007, 68.8% of respondents evaluated the policy of the CPG on Hong Kong after the political handover as "good". The percentages decreased to 47.3% in 2011 (Hong Kong Economic Journal 20 October 2011, p. A21).

China has been highly self-controlled in ruling Hong Kong in the early post-handover years, and criticisms of governance in Hong Kong has generally not come from the CPG but rather from pro-Beijing elites in Hong Kong, such as certain Hong Kong delegates of the National People's Congress (NPC) and a few individual Chinese officials. Still, the relationship between Hong Kong and China has been one of mutual testing of limits and mutual accommodation. In particular, since the massive demonstrations in 2003, China has had a growing tendency to get involved in Hong Kong's affairs. For instance, the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress (SCNPC) has intervened in public controversies over whether Hong Kong can have universal suffrage. Although the Basic Law makes universal suffrage an ultimate goal, it does not set a date for achieving it. Immense mobilization from the pro-democracy camp sought to make this effective in the 2007 CE election and the 2008 LegCo elections. However, in April 2004, the SCNPC decided that Hong Kong would not have universal suffrage for either election. The SCNPC's ruling aroused public worries about the violation of Hong Kong's autonomy and about the ruling as a precedent for Beijing's intervention into Hong Kong's reforms of voting rights.

Public concern was heightened following the resignation of several radio talk show hosts in 2004 who had been highly critical of the CPG and HKSAR government. All of them alleged that they had received threats from Mainland government officials whom they understood were conveying to them the CPG's messages. In addition, it is widely believed that the Liaison Office (LO) of the CPG has been active in arranging potential co-optees in Hong Kong to visit Beijing and meet with Chinese officials for building collaboration. In recent years, the LO has also become heavily involved in coordinating pro-Beijing forces in Hong Kong's elections. In the latest negotiation between the HKSAR government and the pro-democracy camp over the reform package of Hong Kong's constitutional development in 2010, Beijing even jumped in and arrived at a compromise on the future arrangements with the Democratic Party (DP).

If political intervention from Beijing is like a “stick” attempting to rectify “political incorrectness” in Hong Kong, economic advantages presented to Hong Kong are like “carrots” serving to pacify the people. In fact, there has been growing economic integration between Hong Kong and China, particularly since 2003. For example, the Closer Economic Partnership Arrangement (CEPA), signed in June 2003, is an economic agreement between Hong Kong and the Mainland that aims to strengthen trade and investment cooperation between the two. By signing the CEPA, the two sides agree to progressively reduce or eliminate tariffs, non-tariff barriers, and other discriminatory measures on all trade and services, and to promote trade and facilitate investment. In 2011, Chinese Vice Premier Li Keqiang visited Hong Kong in a gesture to expand financial and trade cooperation, with the CPG’s plan to establish an off-shore yuan centre in Hong Kong.

Global relations

Hong Kong’s global relations are particularly important with regard to Taiwan, where it serves at least two political functions. On the one hand, Hong Kong was supposed to represent a showcase of the model of “one country, two systems” to Taiwan. However, this has failed, partially because of Taiwan’s inherent mistrust of the PRC government, and partially because of the series of economic, social, and political problems that have besieged Hong Kong since 1997. On several occasions, politicians from Taiwan criticized the model and pointed to Hong Kong’s situation as evidence that Taiwan should maintain its political autonomy. In 2003, for example, former Taiwan president Lee Teng-hui commented that Hong Kong’s plight “should serve as a warning to Taiwan that freedom and democracy can never coexist under China’s authoritarian regime” (Taipei Times 18 August 2003, p. 1).

On the other hand, Hong Kong was to help pave the way for national reunification by serving to bridge the gap between China and Taiwan. Instead of effectively playing out the role of a good example, the development of relations between Hong Kong and Taiwan since 1997 has become relatively restricted. In particular, during the rule of Taiwan’s Democratic Progressive Party, the HKSAR government had maintained only “pragmatic contacts” with Taiwan, acting quite cautiously and frequently refusing visa extensions or entry visas for important Taiwan politicians. With the election of the Nationalist Party’s Ma Ying-jeou as the Taiwan president in 2008 and the improved relations between Taiwan and China, the Hong Kong government has also modified its no-official contact policy with Taiwan. In 2009, secretary for constitutional and mainland affairs Stephen Lam paid an unprecedented official visit to Taiwan, while CE Tsang has also indicated his interest to pay a personal visit to Taiwan during his term of office. In 2011, Taiwan announced that the Taiwan government's representative office in Hong Kong, which has operated as the "Chung Hwa Travel Service", will be renamed the "Taipei Economic and Cultural Office" with its functions and status upgraded. Moreover, in the near future, Taiwan's representative office in Hong Kong will be able to directly liaise with relevant agencies of the Hong Kong government. Meanwhile, the Hong Kong government will also establish the "Hong Kong Economic, Trade and Cultural Office". All these signify progress in the recent Hong Kong–Taiwan relations.

Even after 1997, the world maintains an active interest in Hong Kong because of its economic and strategic value. In fact, unabated world attention on Hong Kong has put additional pressure on post-1997 governance. The United States passed the Hong Kong Policy Act in 1992, which reiterated US support for democratization and pledged an active role in maintaining Hong Kong's confidence and prosperity. A Hong Kong Policy Act report is periodically prepared by the US Department of State. Similarly, in Britain the government presents reports to the Parliament every six months on the implementation of the Joint Declaration in Hong Kong.

Hong Kong continues to maintain trade relations with various countries. Regarding inward direct investment, China has maintained the largest proportion in 2009 (HK$2,644.5 billion) (www.censtatd.gov.hk/hong\_kong\_statistics/statistical\_tables/index.jsp?charsetID=1&tableID=048). With regard to outward direct investment, in 2009, most of it went to the Mainland (HK$2,731.5 billion). Also, in 2009, a lot of the funds were channelled via the British Virgin Islands (HK$2,829.3 billion) before they arrived at the final destinations within China (chapter 16, www.censtatd.gov.hk/hong\_kong\_statistics/statistical\_tables/index.jsp?charsetID=1&tableID=050). While China's significance in Hong Kong's trade is incontrovertible, there are growing worries about the over-dependence of Hong Kong's economy on China, and the trend of "sinicization"—making the city more "Chinese" and thus diminishing its cosmopolitan character.

Government institutions

Executive

The executive-led principle has continued to guide the government since 1997 although its feasibility and desirability are open to doubt (Cheung 2002; 2007). Under the Basic Law, the executive is in control of the legislature, while the legislature is not equipped with reciprocal powers. Article 48 of the Basic Law entrusted the CE with the power to sign bills, to sign budgets, to decide on government policies, to appoint or remove holders of public offices and judges in accordance with legal procedures, and so on. Also, he can veto the laws passed by the LegCo, and dissolve the LegCo in order to resolve deadlocks between the LegCo and himself (Articles 49 and 50). Given the design of the Basic Law, good governance will only be achieved under several conditions, including the capable leadership of the CE (Scott 2000). However, the Tung administration was obviously not popular and suffered from governance and legitimacy crises, which led subsequently to its premature termination.

Tung made some attempts to augment his leadership, notably by introduction of the Accountability System for Principal Officials (ASPO) in 2002. The ASPO aimed to facilitate coordination of the formulation and implementation of policies, to select the best individuals to hold principal positions, and to enhance cooperation between the government and the LegCo. With the implementation of the ASPO, the membership of the Executive Council (ExCo) comprised 14 principal officials who were directors of bureaus appointed under the accountability system and 5 non-officials (Loh 2002, pp. 13–37). Principal officials are employed under non-civil service contracts. The most senior civil servants in each of the bureaus were renamed “permanent secretaries”, and their main role is to provide full support to the principal officials in running the bureaus and departments. Also, the role of the Central Policy Unit (CPU) was strengthened. In the colonial government, the CPU had functioned as a relatively neutral policy-advising body but, under the ASPO, it emphasizes the roles of policy advising and government image building, as well as actively participating in the making of public opinion.

There is much evidence that the ASPO has not really succeeded. ExCo members had vested interests and political allegiances, which made it difficult for them to work as one body. In the Article 23 saga, for example, James Tien, former chairperson of the Liberal Party (LP), withdrew from the ExCo to avoid having his party support the government’s unpopular legislation. This demonstrated that the ExCo, even after restructuring, was unable to strengthen the political support for the executive and the executive’s capability of rule as expected.

When Tsang took office as the second CE of Hong Kong in July 2005, he was generally welcomed by Hong Kong citizens. In February 2006, he obtained 67.4% public support. The levels of public support for principal officials also reached historic heights, with almost all of them attaining a rating above 50% (HKUPOP 2006).

In order to achieve his goals of strong governance and social harmony, Tsang restructured the ExCo in November 2005 by appointing eight new non-official members, including Anthony Cheung, an academic who was once active in both the Meeting Point, one of the earliest political groups formed in Hong Kong during the political transition, and the DP, and was formerly the chairman of SynergyNet, a policy think tank. Tsang also reintroduced the position of convener, hoping that this arrangement would facilitate better communication within the council. The membership of the Commission on Strategic Development, tasked with discussing political reforms, was substantially expanded to 158. Nevertheless, in 2010, Leung Chun-ying, convener of non-official members of the ExCo, openly criticized the government for its failure to act earlier on the housing problem and its lack of policy vision. Leung's move was commonly interpreted as a strategy to attract public support in the event that he ran for the 2012 CE elections. In addition, Tsang further developed the political appointment system in 2008, by which undersecretaries and political assistants were appointed to assist the work of bureau secretaries. However, the new appointees have been widely criticized for their lack of political experience and there were complaints that their remuneration packages were not commensurate with their qualifications. Recent polls further showed that only 5% of respondents could correctly name the undersecretaries whom they were most familiar with (HKUPOP 2010).

With regard to the election method of the CE in 2012, the government's constitutional reform proposal passed in the LegCo in June 2010 resolves that the number of the EC members in the 2012 CE Election shall increase to 1,200. This implies that the election will continue to be a small-circle election.

Legislature

The HKSAR's first LegCo lasted from 1998 to 2000, and comprised 60 seats, including 20 directly elected seats returned by geographical constituencies (GCs), 30 FC seats, and 10 seats returned by members of the 400-member Selection Committee, which also elected the first CE. The second LegCo had a term of four years running from 2000 to 2004. In this term, the number of GC seats increased from 20 to 24, while the number of seats returned by members of the 800-member EC decreased from 10 to 6. The number of FC seats remained unchanged. The third LegCo functioned from 2004 to 2008, whereas the current LegCo served from 2008 to 2012. In both the third and the current LegCo, out of the 60 seats, 30 were returned by GCs, and 30 by FCs. Based on the government's constitutional reform package, the number of seats of the 2012–16 LegCo will increase to 70 with half of them to be elected by GC elections and the other half by FC elections.

The post-1997 LegCo in Hong Kong has been hindered in its effectiveness notably by two restrictions stipulated in the Basic Law imposing restrictions on private members' bills, and creating separate voting mechanisms. Since 1997, while legislators can present private members' bills, they are forbidden to propose bills that involve public expenditure, issues of political structure, or operation of government. Also, bills related to government policies need the written consent of the CE (Article 74, Basic Law). Researches pointed out that between 1991 and 1997, the private members' bill was a powerful tool for legislators to push for substantial policy change. However, the number of private members' bills significantly decreased after the political handover (Sing 2003, pp. 30–32; Ma 2007a, pp. 117–18).

Regarding the separate voting mechanism, legislators can propose bills, motions, or move amendments to government bills. However, such issues are not decided by a simple majority of the votes of the members present. Since 1997, members are divided into two blocks: GC and FC members. Before a motion or an amendment to a government bill can be passed, it must be supported by a simple majority of the votes of both blocks' present members (Annex II, Basic Law). The effect is to further diminish the power of directly elected members, as the votes of 16 FC members are currently sufficient to block any amendment. FC legislators tend to represent narrow interests, and are in general conservative in their political outlook. When the executive raises motions, bills, or amendments to bills, legislators do not need to vote according to this procedure. They can be passed by a simple majority of all members who are present. In 1998–2004, the LegCo had 287 motion debates. Among the 99 motions vetoed, 50 of them had received simple majority support but were vetoed because of the separate voting rule (Ma 2007a, p. 119). In 2004–08, the LegCo had 209 motion debates, and 38 were vetoed because of the same reason whereas in 2008–10, likewise, 6 motions were vetoed out of 117 (SynergyNet 2010, p. 13).

The constraints placed on the legislature have adversely affected not only its effectiveness, but also cooperation among legislators and political camps, as well as the legislative-executive relationship. In essence, the past few years have seen the LegCo divided into the pro-democracy, pro-Beijing or pro-establishment, and non-affiliated camps, which compete for public publicity and engage in confrontations and mutual name-calling—all of which have decreased the popularity of the legislature in the public's eyes. Poll results in September 2008 showed that only 26% of respondents felt very or quite positive about the performance of the members of the third LegCo (HKUPOP 2008). Fairly speaking, although the LegCo has been rife with confrontations during the last few years, it has also served as a good venue for expressing distinct political views, thus maintaining a good tradition of political pluralism in Hong Kong.

The legislative-executive relationship has been tense in the post-1997 period. Although the elected legislators have a mandate and the executive does not, the elected legislators are in a permanent minority position under the design of the Basic Law. The concerns for the LegCo remain how to improve its effectiveness and the legislative-executive relationship. However, the possibility of improvement appears remote given the existing imbalances in the structure of power within the LegCo.

Local government

At the local government level, the period since 1997 has seen the abolition of two municipal councils (the Urban and Regional Councils) by the government amidst public controversies at the end of 1999 on the grounds that the structures were unnecessary. Before their abolition, the councils were valuable venues for public participation, and served as the second tier of government administration between the first tier (the executive, the legislature, and the judiciary) and the third tier (the District Boards, renamed the District Councils in 1999). The District Boards were established in 1982. In Patten's time, all official and appointed seats in the District Boards were abolished, but that was reversed after 1997. The term for the first post-handover District Councils lasted from 2000 to 2003, the second one lasted from 2004 to 2007, and the third one from 2008 to 2011. The present District Councils are composed of 68 appointed members, 27 ex-officio members, and 412 elected members.

The District Councils have remained an advisory mechanism in the government. However, with the passage of the government's constitutional reform package in June 2010, five new FC LegCo members will be added to the District Council FCs, and be elected by registered voters of the general electorate who do not otherwise have an FC vote. This means that together with the existing one District Council FC seat, there will be six such seats in the 2012–16 LegCo. In addition, in the election of the CE in 2012, more seats will be allocated to the directly elected district councillors to sit on the EC. With all these changes, the political importance of the District Councils will certainly be boosted.

In reviewing the overall development of government institutions since 1997, the core question is whether or not Hong Kong's government institutions have adapted and developed in a way that helps governance. It appears that, in spite of the experience gained over the past years, there is still plenty of room for improvement. This question will be addressed more fully in the chapters that follow.

Governing ideologies and public policy ethics

After 1997, Hong Kong witnessed a series of transformation of the HKSAR government's governing ideologies and public policy ethics. The following sections give a general outline of developments in these areas.

Executive-led principle

Since 1997, the executive-led principle has remained dominant in Hong Kong's governance. However, the meaning of an executive-led government appears to be evolving. On the one hand, it could mean a government led by the CE and ExCo, with an apolitical civil service responsible for policy implementation. This is a more presidential style of executive government. On the other hand, it could mean a government led by the CE and civil servants, where members of the ExCo are only advisers. This is an executive government dominated by bureaucrats (Cheung 2002).

While the executive-led principle assumed leadership by the governor and civil servants during colonial times, during former CE Tung's time, it was more often taken to mean governance by the CE and the ExCo. For instance, after the introduction of the ASPO, the chief secretary had little opportunity to make final policy decisions, in contrast to the power of that position during colonial times (Cheung 2002, p. 63; Loh 2002, pp. 16–17; So & Chan 2002, p. 377). Nevertheless, CE Tsang has gradually altered this situation by reinstating the importance of the political appointees and senior civil servants in the policy process.

Despite the fact that many political actors are no longer willing to take what the executive offers, both Chinese officials and the HKSAR government have reiterated the importance of maintaining an executive-led government. While alteration of this principle of governance would have significant implications for the executive-legislative relationships and the political system of Hong Kong, with mounting public pressure for a more democratic government, a review of the principle is deemed necessary.

Rule of law and soft authoritarianism

It is widely believed that, on the whole, the rule of law has remained relatively intact in post-handover Hong Kong in the sense that the pre-1997 legal system has been preserved, more than 99% of the pre-existing laws are still in force, and lawyers and judges continue their professions in exactly the same manner as before (Chen 2002, p. 83). Nevertheless, some developments in the post-1997 period have caused public concerns about whether the HKSAR government has sufficient commitment to the rule of law.

The most commonly discussed example in this regard is perhaps the right of abode issue in 1999. In this incident, the Hong Kong government actively solicited the SCNPC's interpretation of the Basic Law provisions so as to overrule the HKSAR Court of Final Appeal's earlier decision to grant right of abode in Hong Kong to children in the Mainland whose parents have Hong Kong permanent resident status. Consequently, the SCNPC interpreted the provision of the Basic Law, and the court had to follow the SCNPC's interpretation in its future rulings on cases that involve that specific provision. The incident shows that the government had little respect for the court's judgement, and had failed to assert the jurisdiction and autonomy of the Hong Kong courts.

Along with the above are the HKSAR government's increasing instances of soft authoritarian practices (So & Chan 2002, pp. 380–81; So 2002, pp. 413–17). For instance, after the political handover, the Provisional LegCo had revived certain repressive and unpopular provisions of the Public Order Ordinance and the Societies Ordinance that had been repealed by the colonial regime before 1997. The laws then stipulate that demonstrations with more than 30 participants must seek a no-objection notice from the police; associations should register for governmental approval; and the concept of national security is introduced as a criterion for the police to decide whether or not a demonstration or an association should be approved.

Moreover, it has become common for the police to deploy a disproportionately large amount of force and videotape the demonstrators during demonstrations, use pepper spray on protestors, and make public threats that the government reserves the right to prosecute law-breaking protestors in the future. Lately, the police has also been under heavy criticism for arresting reporters and human rights observers, and violating freedom of the press. On the other hand, in recent years, some activists were concerned about letting their political demands known to the CPG, which has made the LO, the CPG's representative agency in Hong Kong, a common final destination of many protests. The police has been very sensitive to this development. For instance, the police prosecuted six activists who had protested against the arrest of Chinese dissident Liu Xiaobo by the CPG outside the LO in December 2009.

In addition, episodes such as the Citizens' Radio issue in 2007 have caused increasing worries about the police's tendency towards selective prosecution. The Citizens' Radio was established by well-known democrats in Hong Kong including Tsang Kin-shing (nicknamed "the Bull"). Owing to the pending of its application for a license for broadcasting under the Telecommunications Ordinance (section 23), the broadcasts of Citizens' Radio was illegal. On 25 May 2007, guest speakers were invited to deliberate in a programme on the 1989 Beijing Tiananmen Incident. Eight of the guest speakers including several democrats were subsequently prosecuted by the police for participating in illegal broadcasting, but others such as Anthony Cheung and Choy So-yuk, formerly a legislator from the pro-establishment camp, were not.

Self-censorship, political correctness, and press freedom

Post-1997 Hong Kong saw a tendency on the part of the HKSAR government to become more “politically correct” in the eyes of the CPG. For instance, in the handling of Falun Gong followers in Hong Kong, one secretary for security labelled them as preaching heretic teachings, even though they had not committed any legal infringements or caused harm to other people in society. The passage of a CE Election Bill in 2001 that explicitly empowers the CPG to dismiss an elected CE “under any other circumstances” than those specified in the Basic Law is commonly seen as a unilateral surrender of Hong Kong’s local autonomy. In 2011, prominent Chinese dissidents Wang Dan and Wuer Kaixi were denied entry to Hong Kong to attend the 29 January funeral of the democrat Szeto Wah, which is another example illustrating the highly cautious attitude of the HKSAR government in being politically correct or the CPG’s involvement in the government’s decision-making process.

Freedom of the press has sometimes seemed to be under threat too, as seen from the trends in the media and the attitudes of the government. Researches pointed out that there have been increasing trends of self-censorship in the media, and the growing affiliation of the Hong Kong media owners and the various authorities in China both economically and politically has dampened media autonomy (Lee & Lin 2006; Chan & Lee 2007; Ma 2007b). Regarding the role and principle of editorial independence for Radio Television Hong Kong (RTHK), a government-funded radio station that has produced many programmes critical of government policies, criticisms from pro-Beijing figures in Hong Kong certainly played a part in leading to the Review of Public Service Broadcasting in Hong Kong from 2006 to 2010. Since the RTHK has been commonly perceived as a barometer of Hong Kong’s press freedom, the final decisions of the review that a Charter of RTHK would be made and the Board of Advisers of RTHK would be formed in 2010 have aroused public criticism and worries. In September 2011, the government announced its appointment of Roy Tang, deputy secretary for labour and welfare (welfare), an administrative officer who has no media experience, to be the director of broadcasting. The appointment attracted widespread criticism from the Hong Kong community. For example, the Civic Party called for the replacement of Tang and denounced the appointment as the government’s blatant attempt to control the RTHK (<http://rthk.hk/rthk/news/englishnews/news.htm?main&20110914&56&784122>).

Nationalism and depoliticization

The HKSAR regime has been active in cultivating nationalism among the people of Hong Kong and promoting a “thicker” set of common memories designed to increase the public’s sense of community by introducing nationalism as a correlate of ideal citizenship (Lam 2005). For example, subsequent to its establishment, the HKSAR government carried out a series of measures to strengthen Chinese elements in the existing school curriculum. School textbook publishers were provided with “guidelines” advising them to observe the “one China” policy. Since 1998, Putonghua, the national language of China, has been taught in all primary schools (Morris et al. 2000, p. 249). China tours for Hong Kong students and youngsters, and cultural exchanges between students from Hong Kong and the Mainland, have been highly encouraged by the HKSAR government and frequently organized by schools and youth organizations. In 2011, the Curriculum Development Council recommended introducing a compulsory subject of moral and national education starting from primary schools and then expanding to secondary schools.

In recent years, notably after the massive protests against the legislation of Article 23 of the Basic Law in 2003, the HKSAR government has taken steps with the CPG to further promote patriotism at a society level. For instance, Chinese medallists of the 2008 Olympic Games and Chinese astronauts were arranged to visit Hong Kong.

Ironically, in parallel to the attempts of renationalization, the government simultaneously embarked on depoliticization measures to contain political conflicts. The strategy was driven notably by Tung’s fear of politics, and his belief that in Hong Kong, economic goals should precede political ones (Lau 2002; Lam 2005). Another example comes from chief secretary Henry Tang’s remarks on the “post-80s” activists in 2011. In one occasion, he stressed the need for compromises, warned the youngsters to pay heed to responsibilities and rational ideas, and hinted at the danger of youth political activism in Hong Kong by citing the shooting of a US congresswoman in Arizona as an example in his speech.

Ethics of self-reliance and economic efficiency

In post-1997 governance in Hong Kong, an increasing emphasis has been placed on good citizens as productive, independent, and “proactive” in acquiring economic skills so as to be useful to Hong Kong’s economic recovery. This emphasis on the concept of self-reliance explains why Comprehensive Social Security Assistance (CSSA) recipients who are able-bodied people and could work are perceived as a problem, and welfare recipients have been stigmatized. The CSSA is a type of government financial assistance providing a safety net for the unemployed and poor. Driven by the fear that such recipients will become dependent on the government, the Active Employment Assistance Programme under the Support for Self-Reliance Scheme has been implemented to help them to become self-reliant again, offering them job retraining and job-search assistance.

The above analysis indicates another imminent question for Hong Kong's governance today: will the development of governing ideologies and ethics bring about a more effective and just government? It is evident that the HKSAR government has undergone tremendous changes in these areas and is still adjusting to achieve the best fit to meet the demands of the people, the CPG, and the requirements of efficient and effective governance.

Civil society, political participation, and political parties

Despite all the problems that have confronted the HKSAR since 1997, its civil society remains vibrant. Several trends are evident in its development over the past few years. First, the political strategies adopted by the people to express their political views have become more action oriented and diverse. Demonstrations have become an extremely popular way to express opinion to the extent that Hong Kong has often been referred to as “a city of protest”. According to the statistics of the police, there were over 5,600 protests in Hong Kong in 2010. Second, the participation of social and professional groups in politics has increased, including groups of accountants, property agents, legal professionals, and so on. Third, the younger generations, commonly called the “post-80s”, have become very active political actors in particular since the protests against the demolition of the Star Ferry clock tower in 2006.

Fourth, forms of political participation have expanded. From ordinary means such as demonstrations, voting, and developing contacts with government officials, the period has also witnessed the growing popularity of discursive participation via some radio talk show programmes that served as a mouthpiece for the people. As the political space for these programmes has gradually diminished since the resignation of several popular talk show hosts in 2004, digital activism has grown as an alternative venue for the expression and articulation of political views. Facebook, Twitter, personal blogs, and citizen journalism have rapidly developed as alternative means of political participation.

Fifth, because of the competition between different political camps and political ideas in the post-1997 period, civil society has had a chance to reconsider its political values. There is a growing articulation and diversification of overall social and political goals in society, as witnessed by the large proportion of people demanding a quicker pace of democratization of Hong Kong's political system. Another illustration is the call for a defence of Hong Kong's core values, such as freedom of speech and democracy, by a group of professionals and academics in 2004. During the past few years, activists have also been active in striving for better preservation of local cultural heritage and old communities as well as environmental conservation, and challenging the perceived widespread cronyism and the development-oriented governance in Hong Kong.

By contrast, the development of political parties in Hong Kong has not been as positive. The increase in the number of political parties and groups in the last few years has rendered the political society even more divided. In 2010, the resignation of the five legislators of the Civic Party and the League of Social Democrats (LSD) to demand for universal suffrage in 2012, which was not supported by other pro-democracy forces in the LegCo, created divisions in the democratic camp. The subsequent support of the DP for the government's constitutional reform package further generated mutual suspicions in the camp. An internal dissension in the DP itself due to party members' diverging views on the government's constitutional reform package led to the walk-out of the dissenters and the formation of the Neo Democrats in 2011. Furthermore, the factional conflicts in the LSD have caused the withdrawal of Raymond Wong and Albert Chan, founders and legislators of the party, in 2011, and the establishment of another new political party, People's Power. On the other hand, the Hong Kong Labour Party, organized by legislators including Cyd Ho and Lee Cheuk-yan, was formed in December 2011.

With regard to the pro-establishment camp, a split in the LP has given rise to the formation of another pro-business political group, the Economic Synergy, in 2009. Nevertheless, in 2011, it was announced that a new alliance of 12 business and professional-sector legislators, headed by Jeffrey Lam from the Economic Synergy, was established, which marks a restructuring of the power distribution in the LegCo. In addition, the New People's Party led by former secretary for security Regina Ip was also formed in 2011.

Poll results show that political groups and parties in Hong Kong are in general not very popular. In August 2011, the recognition ratings of various political groups and parties ranged from 71.2% (Association for Democracy and People's Livelihood) to 89.4% (DP), while their support ratings ranged from 32.6% (LSD) to 50.8% (Federation of Trade Unions) (HKUPOP 2011b). Overall, the differences of the political groups and parties in the recognition and support ratings were only marginal.

Although political parties have failed to meet the expectations of many, they themselves are not solely to blame. Scholars pointed out that the various legal and institutional constraints on political parties, and the antipathy of the governments of Beijing and Tung towards pro-democracy political parties and party formation in Hong Kong generally, have contributed to their marginalization (Lau & Kuan 2002; Yep 2003).

Structure of this book

In the chapters that follow, we aim to provide a comprehensive and critical analysis of Hong Kong's government and politics since the 1997 handover. This volume consists of four main topic areas: political institutions, mediating institutions and political actors, policy environment, and the political environment. On each topic, this volume analyzes whether the model of "one country, two systems" and post-1997 governance have been successful, and the reasons for success or failure.

Part I, Political Institutions, contains five chapters. Chapter 2 examines the establishment and functions of the executive, its relations with the LegCo, and the challenges ahead. Chapter 3 discusses the LegCo's history, composition, powers and functions, constraints and effectiveness, as well as ways to strengthen its capacity. Chapter 4 reviews the hopes, doubts, and challenges faced by the judiciary in the post-1997 period, and analyzes whether the Hong Kong judiciary will be able to maintain its independence and other fundamental principles. Chapter 5 examines the distinctive features of the Hong Kong civil service and traces the development of civil service reform over the post-handover years, and offers an evaluation of its overall effectiveness and possible new directions of development. Chapter 6 examines the development, contribution, and significance of the District Councils, advisory bodies, and statutory bodies to governance and their limitations.

Part II, Mediating Institutions and Political Actors, contains five chapters. Chapter 7 traces the development of the democracy movement in Hong Kong since 2003. It further examines the problems encountered by the movement and its possible future under the influence of the CPG. Chapter 8 describes the development of political parties and the electoral system in Hong Kong, and analyzes the problems that have confronted their development. Chapter 9 studies the characteristics of civil society and important civic and political organizations in Hong Kong, and examines the challenges of enhancing the effectiveness of Hong Kong's civil society. Chapter 10 traces the development of the political identity, culture, and participation in Hong Kong before and after the political handover. Chapter 11 provides an analytical account of the concept of public opinion, and the media's role and performance in the process of public-opinion formation in Hong Kong. Further, it investigates the effects of the media, and the relationship between public opinion, media, and social formations.

Part III, Policy Environment, contains three chapters. Chapter 12 traces the development of economic policy in Hong Kong since 1997, and explores the economic challenges confronting the government. Chapter 13 introduces the basics of the areas of social policy, and investigates into the pragmatic origin and main features of Hong Kong's social policy. Chapter 14 uses the urban political economy approach to examine the factors that have influenced urban policy development in Hong Kong, and cites important examples of urban policy as points of political contestation in the post-1997 period. It argues that institutional support for public interest articulation in urban policy has been inadequate.

Part IV, Political Environment, contains two chapters. Chapter 15 provides a brief overview of the changing political context in Hong Kong since 2003, examines the key aspects of Beijing's strategy toward Hong Kong, and provides several observations about the prospect of this relationship. Chapter 16 studies the changing international role and status of Hong Kong after 1997. Although Hong Kong remains a part of the international community, there have been observable degrees of "sinicization", which lead to the worries about the potential conflicts between the processes of internationalization and sinicization.

The concluding chapter presents a summary evaluation of Hong Kong governance since 1997, and provides a roadmap of possibilities for achieving a more effective, fair, and legitimate governance for Hong Kong in the future.

Box 1.1 One country, two systems

The principle of one country, two systems was proposed by the Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping in 1984 during the Sino-British negotiations over the future political arrangements of Hong Kong. It stipulates that Hong Kong can continue to practise capitalism with a high degree of autonomy for 50 years after 1997, and that its basic way of life shall remain intact.

Box 1.2 The Basic Law

The Basic Law is the constitutional document for the HKSAR. It was promulgated by China in 1990 and came into effect on 1 July 1997 when Hong Kong, formerly a British colony, was returned to China. The Basic Law consists of nine chapters with 160 articles, and three annexes. The enshrined principles include "one country, two systems", "a high degree of autonomy", and "Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong". Also, it stipulates the systems practised in Hong Kong, such as the continuation of its capitalist system and way of life, and protects the rights and freedoms of its residents.

Questions

1. How would you describe the overall political context in Hong Kong after the political handover in 1997?
2. In what ways should governance in Hong Kong be further improved? What are the areas (e.g., government institutions, governing ideologies, the rule of law, local political culture, relations with the CPG) deserving particular attention?

References

- Chan, JM & Lee, FLF 2007, "Mass Media and Public Opinion", in WM Lam, W Wong & I Holliday (eds), Contemporary Hong Kong Politics, Hong Kong University Press, Hong Kong, pp. 155–76.
- Chen, AHY 2002, "The Constitution and the Rule of Law", in SK Lau (ed), The First Tung Chee-hwa Administration: The First Five Years of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, The Chinese University Press, Hong Kong, pp. 69–88.
- Cheung, ABL 2002, "The Changing Political System: Executive-led Government or 'Disabled' Governance?", in SK Lau (ed), The First Tung Chee-hwa Administration: The First Five Years of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, The Chinese University Press, Hong Kong, pp. 41–68.
- Cheung, ABL 2007, "Executive-led Governance or Executive Power 'Hollowed-out'—The Political Quagmire of Hong Kong", Asian Journal of Political Science, vol. 15, no. 1, pp. 17–38.
- Civic Exchange 2004, Listening to the Wisdom of the Masses: Hong Kong People's Attitudes toward Constitutional Reform, viewed 22 June 2005, <http://www.hkbu.edu.hk/~hktip/listening/listening\_e.pdf>.
- HKUPOP 2006, Ratings of Principal Officials, viewed 22 October 2010, <<http://a2010.hkupop.hku.hk/chinese/popexpress/poall/overall/datatables/datatables52.html>>.
- HKUPOP 2008, People's Satisfaction with the Performance of Members of the Third HKSAR Legislative Council, viewed 22 October 2010, <<http://hkupop.hku.hk/english/popexpress/sargperf/third%20lc/index.html>>.
- HKUPOP 2010, Popularity of Undersecretaries and Political Assistants, viewed 29 December 2010, <<http://hkupop.hku.hk/english/popexpress/politicalAssistants/index.html>>.
- HKUPOP 2011a, People's Satisfaction with the HKSAR Government, viewed 8 October 2011, <<http://hkupop.hku.hk/english/popexpress/sargperf/sarg/index.html>>.
- HKUPOP 2011b, Ratings of Top Ten Political Groups, viewed 8 October 2011, <<http://hkupop.hku.hk/english/popexpress/pgrating/topten1.html>>.
- Lam, WM 2005, "Depoliticization, Citizenship, and the Politics of Community in Hong Kong", Citizenship Studies, vol. 9, no. 3, pp. 309–22.
- Lau, SK 2002, "Tung Chee-hwa's Governing Strategy: The Shortfall in Politics", in SK Lau (ed), The First Tung Chee-hwa Administration: The First Five Years of the

- Hong Kong Special Administrative Region*, The Chinese University Press, Hong Kong, pp. 1–40.
- Lau, SK & Kuan, HC 2002, “Hong Kong’s Stunted Political Party System”, The China Quarterly, vol. 172, December, pp. 1010–28.
- Lee, FLF & Lin, AMY 2006, “Newspaper Editorial Discourse and the Politics of Self-Censorship”, Discourse & Society, vol. 17, no. 3, pp. 331–58.
- Loh, C 2002, Accountability without Democracy: The Principal Officials Accountability System in Hong Kong, National Democratic Institute, Washington D.C., Civic Exchange, Hong Kong.
- Ma, N 2007a, Political Development in Hong Kong: State, Political Society, and Civil Society, Hong Kong University Press, Hong Kong.
- Ma, N 2007b, “State-Press Relationship in Post-1997 Hong Kong: Constant Negotiation amidst Self-Restraint”, The China Quarterly, vol. 192, pp. 949–70.
- Morris, P, Kan, F & Morris, E 2000, “Education, Civic Participation and Identity: Continuity and Change in Hong Kong”, Cambridge Journal of Education, vol. 30, no. 2, pp. 243–62.
- Scott, I 2000, “The Disarticulation of Hong Kong’s Post-Handover Political System”, The China Journal, vol. 43, January, pp. 29–53.
- Sing, M 2003, “Legislative-Executive Interface in Hong Kong”, in C Loh & Civic Exchange (eds), Building Democracy: Creating Good Government for Hong Kong, Hong Kong University Press, Hong Kong, pp. 27–34.
- So, AY 2002, “Social Protests, Legitimacy Crisis, and the Impetus toward Soft Authoritarianism in the Hong Kong SAR”, in SK Lau (ed), The First Tung Chee-hwa Administration: The First Five Years of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, The Chinese University Press, Hong Kong, pp. 399–418.
- So, AY & Chan, MK 2002, “Conclusion: Crisis and Transformation in the Hong Kong SAR—Toward Soft Authoritarian Developmentalism?”, in MK Chan & AY So (eds), Crisis and Transformation in China’s Hong Kong, M.E. Sharpe, Armonk, New York, pp. 363–84.
- SynergyNet 2010, 2009–10 Xianggang tequ lifa hui yi jue fenxi baogao (An analysis report on the 2009–10 Hong Kong LegCo), in Chinese, SynergyNet, Hong Kong.
- The World Bank 2001, 2001 World Development Indicators, The World Bank, Washington, D.C.
- Yep, KM 2003, “Political Reform and Political Parties”, in C Loh & Civic Exchange (eds), Building Democracy: Creating Good Government for Hong Kong, Hong Kong University Press, Hong Kong.

Useful websites

- The Hong Kong SAR government
<http://www.gov.hk/en/residents/>
- The Hong Kong Transition Project
<http://www.hkbu.edu.hk/~hktp>
- Hong Kong University Public Opinion Poll
<http://www.hkupop.hku.hk>

Further reading

- Chan, MK 2008, China's Hong Kong Transformed: Retrospect and Prospects beyond the First Decade, City University of Hong Kong Press, Hong Kong. The book is a good introduction to the changes and development of Hong Kong politics and society after the political handover.
- Chan, MK & So, AY 2002, Crisis and Transformation in China's Hong Kong, M.E. Sharpe, Armonk, New York. The book contains a critical review of Hong Kong politics before and shortly after the political unification.
- Lau, SK (ed) 2002, The First Tung Chee-hwa Administration: The First Five Years of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, The Chinese University Press, Hong Kong. The book contains an analysis of various areas of governance up to 2001 in Hong Kong.
- Miners, N 1998, Government and Politics of Hong Kong, 5th edn with post-handover update by James T.H. Tang, Oxford University Press, Hong Kong. The book provides a comprehensive review of government and politics in colonial Hong Kong.
- Sing, M (ed) 2009, Politics and Government in Hong Kong: Crisis under Chinese Sovereignty, Routledge, London and New York. The book analyzes the development and problems of governance and civil society in Hong Kong notably after 2003.

Conclusion

Looking to the Future

The Editors

As Hong Kong enters the second decade after the return of its sovereignty to China, this book has attempted to provide an updated, comprehensive, and critical analysis of the development of its governing institutions, major policy areas, and relationship with China and the world, in the context of governance and the experiment of “one country, two systems”. Along with this attempt, topics related to political parties and the electoral systems, the mass media and public opinion, political culture and identity, and civil society in Hong Kong were also examined with regard to how successful they have worked in promoting a more effective, accountable, and legitimate governance.

Political institutions

In the section of political institutions, five key political institutions in Hong Kong are examined critically: the executive, the legislature, the judiciary, the civil service, District Councils, advisory and statutory bodies. All these institutions are facing different changes and challenges as Hong Kong continued its journey of political development under the experiment of “one country, two systems”. They are under pressure for changes in order to adapt to the changing political reality and contribute to good governance.

In comparing the design and actual impact of the executive, Li Pang-kwong has found the notion of executive-led government has gradually evolved into the executive-driven government. Under this system by default, the HKSAR government has to maintain a majority coalition in the LegCo by persuasion and performance. This highlights the importance of building up a structural and stable linkage between the executive and the legislature. Pushing this argument further and deeper, there is an urgent need for Hong Kong to construct a viable and workable governing system that is conducive to the effective governance of Hong Kong. Unfortunately, the lack of an institutional push for both a mature party system to develop and a pool of professionalized political leaders to emerge have crippled the effective governing of Hong Kong. If Hong Kong is to strengthen its governing capacities, a properly designed mechanism and a series of related measures aiming to address these structural limitations should be in place.

The importance of the involvement of the legislature in ensuring effective governance is echoed by Percy Luen-tim Lui's chapter on the LegCo. To provide better governance in Hong Kong, instead of following the old path of limiting the role and power of the LegCo which has been proved as not working from the experience of the last decade, Lui suggests three ways to strengthen the capacity of the future LegCo, including: (i) amending Article 74 of the Basic Law to allow legislators greater latitude to introduce private member's bill; (ii) reforming the committee and panel systems to assist the proper functioning of the LegCo; and (iii) strengthening the staff support system to provide sufficient staff support to the members of the LegCo. If the LegCo can institute all these reforms, it is highly probable that it can strengthen its capacity to perform its functions and roles at a more satisfactory level.

The analysis of the judiciary, one of the institutions most central to the question of "one country, two system", is taken up by Benny Y.T. Tai. As he points out, one of the greatest challenges in the future is how the CFA will reframe its constitutional jurisdiction to review the compatibility of legislative acts of the NPC and the SCNPC with the Basic Law. After the handover, the struggle of the HKSAR judiciary focuses on how it should resolve the inherent conflict between the Hong Kong and Mainland legal systems. While the HKSAR judiciary is still able to protect the principle of rule of law and human rights of the Hong Kong people, this is mainly possible when the matters concerned do not involve the interests of the central authorities. Judicial autonomy in Hong Kong in the long run depends on the development of constitutionalism in the Mainland China.

In the civil service chapter, Wilson Wong considers the civil service as one of the key governing institutions in Hong Kong but its power and influence are frequently challenged by the post-1997 reforms. When Hong Kong was a British colony, the political system was a bureaucrat-dominated system. One advantage of this is the construction of the "conscience" of Hong Kong—the civil service system is designed to ensure that civil servants can make the best policies based on their own expertise and judgment, without being threatened or biased by internal and external pressures. However, in the reforms after the handover, including the Accountability System for Principal Officials (ASPO), public sector reform, and civil service reform, the "conscience" has been weakened and threatened. One of the major implications of those reforms is the shift of power from the career bureaucrats to the politicians who are not popularly elected but often have a pro-business background, especially linked to the land-based elites. While it is still too early to judge if the reforms are able to lead to more efficiency, its negative political consequences are much clearer.

Jermain T.M. Lam studies the HKSAR's local government system and its complex web of local, advisory, and statutory bodies. One major observation he has made is the transformation of the role of those bodies, from being mainly advisory in nature into political entities with increasing political influence. For example, he argues that the passage of the government's constitutional reform package in June 2010 has transformed a District Council from a simple advisory body to a dynamic arena for power struggle. Lam further notes that the context within which the District Councils, advisory and statutory bodies operate has changed from consultative politics to democratic and electoral politics. If these bodies cannot adapt to the changes in the external political environment; they would not be able to make contribution to governance.

Mediating institutions and political actors

With the limitations of the institutional politics in Hong Kong, mediating institutions have played some important functions by default to compensate for the structural deficiencies of the governing institutions. However, their healthy development and proper functioning are often constrained in Hong Kong. Furthermore, given the changes in the political landscape, it is doubtful how long political stability and effective governance can be maintained without real and significant reforms of the political system.

In analyzing the democratic reforms in Hong Kong in Chapter 7, Sing Ming and Tang Yuen-sum pointed out the greater intervention of the CPG in Hong Kong's democratization after the July 1 rally of 2003, such as the SCNPC's 2004 decision to rule out universal suffrage for electing the CE and the legislature in 2007 and 2008 respectively. Adopting a delaying strategy for political reform in Hong Kong, the CPG has contributed to the rise of new political groups who favour more confrontational tactics to pressurize Beijing to implement genuine universal suffrage in Hong Kong. Should the structural contradictions remain unresolved, there is still fertile ground for fanning greater public support and intensified confrontational strategies in Hong Kong despite the split in the democracy camp.

In his chapter on political parties, Ma Ngok argues that despite their long history, political parties are weak and divided, and their development is hindered by a number of factors, including the CPG's anti-politics stance. In line with this, other legal and institutional constraints have also deterred, instead of attracted, talents to join political parties. For example, the CE Ordinance has stipulated the non-partisan character of the CE. Most of the executive positions are not open for electoral competition. Parties in Hong Kong are also fraught with their own internal problems of succession, resources, and development, with many citizens disappointed with the performance of the parties. The legislature is restricted in its power, which lessens people's incentives of joining political parties. This creates a paradox for HKSAR governance: the political grouping that enjoys majority public opinion support is rendered a permanent minority, which will continue to create pressures for electoral and political reform for years to come.

Elaine Y.M. Chan agrees that Hong Kong has a sizable and vibrant civil society. However, a good amount of its organizations are weak in structure and have inadequate resources. The Hong Kong society is by no means submissive to the government. Signature campaigns, rallies, and demonstrations have become common expressions of public discontent. Moreover, in the last few years, the Web and electronic devices have become effective means of mobilization. Information dissemination, discussion, and debate that took place on the Web resolved the time and space limitation of face-to-face meeting. The Web has certainly revolutionized public participation and facilitated movement mobilization. However, similar to the situation of other mediating institutions in Hong Kong, Hong Kong's civil society also faces different environmental and structural constraints such as its lack of resources and depth of participation, and its relatively marginalized status in the political system. All these have limited its effect on facilitating the building of a more equal, just, and harmonious society.

In Lam Wai-man's chapter, she points out since the political handover, political activism has surged and political participation has also been on the rise. Parallel with government attempts to cultivate patriotism and social harmony, people have also been well on the way of defending their core values and aspired way of life. The massive protest against Article 23 in 2003 is a good example. Despite people's lingering feelings of political powerlessness, they have continued to seek to influence the government through various means including innovative non-institutional means, such as the use of confrontational tactics, digital activism, citizen journalism, and judicial review actions. Alongside these, increasing political involvement is found among the younger generations, the so-called "post-80s" and "post-90s". All these developments have added new elements of activism and idealism to local political culture and participation.

Joseph M. Chan and Francis L.F. Lee provide an analytical account of the definitions of public opinion, the roles of the mass media, and how they have influenced the government and politics of Hong Kong. As argued, public opinion in Hong Kong is discursive and political in nature. In the absence of democracy, the media has served a surrogate democracy function as a forum for the discursive struggle to mediate public discourses and reflect the public opinion. Because of the high levels of social pluralism in Hong Kong and the operation of its media market, the media is able to retain relative autonomy. However, some developments are worth attention. For example, the media may censor itself in face of political pressure, ownership influence and advertisers' influence. Further, the rich resources and the unmatched authority that the government has at its disposal have given it an edge in setting the agenda and defining social reality for the media and the public.

Policy environment

The chapters on policy environment focus on "politics in action". It serves the purpose of illustrating how political forces in Hong Kong compete to determine "who gets what, when and how" in each policy area. Although the three chapters are written independently by different authors, similar conclusions are found. They conclude that public policy should be approached as conscious and rational choices by policymakers with political considerations. Furthermore, many policies in Hong Kong are dominated by those who enjoy more power and representation in the system.

A central theme in Wilson Wong and Raymond Yuen's chapter is that economic policy is shaped by more than economic forces. The image of a "market economy" constructed by the HKSAR government is found more like a myth than the reality as political considerations often override economic logic in shaping economic policy. The making of economic policy in Hong Kong is often biased towards the benefit of the more privileged groups. The best example of how power distribution shapes resource allocation is its fiscal system under which the politically powerful are often taxed less but benefit more. The political system dominated by the rich and powerful also deprives the government of sufficient state capacity and state autonomy for carrying out effective industrial policies to transform and restructure the economy.

Wong Hung described the social policy in the post-1997 era as no more than "old wine in new bottles". Social policy of the HKSAR government still has the same economic pragmatism origin as its colonial past. Moreover, the Hong Kong government has to follow the decisions of the British colonial government before 1997 and the HKSAR government has to follow the guideline of the CPG after 1997. The practical and piecemeal responses produced are inadequate for addressing the fundamental needs and problems, leading to sharp deteriorations of the social conditions in Hong Kong, which include deepening of poverty, widening wealth gap, rise of class conflicts, and anti-rich sentiment. More alarmingly, the HKSAR government seems to lose its will to govern and tends to wait for the CPG to take political leadership in handling the rising class conflicts.

In his chapter on urban policy, James Lee points out urban policy should not be approached simply as finding technical means for technical problems in urban area. Its general domain has long expanded from physical concerns to social and community concerns in which politics has a key role to play as competitions of interests and conflicts of values are involved and inevitable. In this process, ideally, government should fulfill the important function of interest intermediation to maintain fairness and justice. Unfortunately, opposite to what the theory suggests, Lee finds that the “growth machine thesis” under the urban political economy approach provides the most useful and powerful framework in understanding the urban policy in the HKSAR. He has seen a network of powerful interest groups, all linked up to the property market, exert a dominant influence on the urban policies in Hong Kong for their own interest maximization.

Political environment

As a global city and part of China, the politics of Hong Kong is undoubtedly shaped by its external environment apart from domestic forces. We have devoted the last two chapters of this book to the political environment of Hong Kong, including its relations with the Mainland and the wider world.

In his chapter on relations between Hong Kong and the Mainland, Peter T.Y. Cheung argues that the CPG has recast its strategy toward Hong Kong and exerted increasing influence in its governance since 2003. This poses both opportunities and challenges for Hong Kong. Politically, discontents erupted in July 2003 have prompted the CPG to adopt a much more preemptive and interventionist strategy towards the HKSAR. Economically, the HKSAR is increasingly relying on the economic opportunities offered by the Mainland. However, the HKSAR government still lacks a comprehensive, multi-faceted, and coordinated strategy to engage the social and political actors at different levels of the Chinese political system. Nor is there a consensus in the Hong Kong community about how to utilize the opportunities and meet the challenges arising from the growing social and economic integration between the two areas. Further, there may well be a huge gap between how the elites and the other social sectors in Hong Kong view the growing connections with the Mainland. In short, whether Hong Kong can maintain its special status under “one country, two systems” and a high degree of autonomy in the future remains a key challenge for both the Hong Kong people and the CPG.

Ting Wai and Ellen Lai analyze the role and place of the SAR in the wider world. Closer economic integration with the Mainland was an inevitable development after Hong Kong became part of China, but this has also posed a problem for Hong Kong’s external relations and international status. A major challenge that the HKSAR has to face is the “provincialization” of the HKSAR as all major coastal cities of China seek to become more international. While Hong Kong's economy is more and more integrated with China, the dilemma is that Hong Kong has to prove to the outside world that it is very different from the Mainland, due to its international character and separate identity, but it is not politically correct to explicitly say so. Hong Kong, as an international city, always wants to benefit from globalization and internationalization. It is definitely in the interests of Hong Kong if the economic and political liberalization of China continues, and the further integration of China into the international community is the best guarantee for the future of the HKSAR.

Discussion

Is it possible to achieve a more effective, fair, and legitimate governance in Hong Kong? This question does not have a straightforward answer. As a matter of fact, multiple factors and their interplay have affected the governance in Hong Kong over the past years since the handover. The path trodden has not been smooth, and Hong Kong's adjustment to its new identity is nothing simple. The possible reasons contributing to such a bumpy road of adjustment are many, as eloquently put forward in various chapters of the book. However, drawing from the lessons and analysis from the chapters in the book, several common and major factors can be identified.

First, the CPG's attitudes towards politics play a significant part in deciding the political development of post-handover Hong Kong. Renowned for its anti-politics stance, the CPG, together with the HKSAR government, have hoped to confine the scope and speed of politicization in Hong Kong. Such a depoliticized stance is embodied in the Basic Law, and subsequently elaborated in the Chief Executive Ordinance and in certain government policies. The institutional and political framework thus set for Hong Kong includes the requirements of the CE to be non-partisan, an executive-led government, a limited legislature in its composition and various other constraints, and the abolition of the Urban Council and Regional Council. Also, the institutional and political makeup has directly discouraged political parties' development in Hong Kong, and the anti-politics stance of the governments has reinforced the tendency of self-censorship of the media.

Second, the "economy first" ideology of both the CPG and the HKSAR government has constituted the major beliefs related to social policy, and the CPG's dealings with Hong Kong. The ideology is supported by a deep-seated view of Hong Kong as an economic city and its people as economic animals, and its effects are notable. For example, with regard to social policy, the ideology has facilitated the growth of an anti-welfarist tradition and other key economic beliefs discouraging to welfare development.

The fact that Hong Kong is valued predominantly for its economic utility explains the Mainland's emphasis on economic measures in trying to win the hearts and minds of the local population, and in nurturing a sense of economic dependence on China among them. Further, the emphasis on economy has indirectly shaped Hong Kong into a place deprived of alternative visions of a better society apart from economic advancement.

Third, the "business first" attitude of the HKSAR government and the monopolistic position of business in politics have dampened the government's ability to upgrade and transform the economy and to have fairer distribution in resources. Scholars point out that the government's biased attitude and the growth of crony capitalism in Hong Kong have created unequal opportunities in economic competition, and made the city less attractive for doing business. Further, this "business first" attitude reflects the government's insensitivity to public sentiments, and has worsened the relationship between the government and the people.

Fourth, the idea of "one country, two systems" is a contradiction in itself, and consequently requires an immense amount of creativity and collaborative effort to make it work. The years since the political handover have witnessed attempts from both the Mainland and Hong Kong to bridge the gulf between them. With regard to the judiciary, the SCNPC's interpretations of the Basic Law, and the CFA's responses to the SCNPC's interpretations in the right of abode issue, are examples of mutual accommodation to resolve the inherent conflict between the two different legal systems. Furthermore, the contrast between Hong Kong and China is vividly exposed in several other incidents, such as the electoral arrangements for the CE and LegCo beyond 2007–08 and the political reform for the year of 2012, in which Beijing became heavily involved in Hong Kong's affairs. While the inherent discrepancy between China and the Hong Kong public on issues such as the rule of law and democratization seems inevitable, the governments' rejection of politics and their one-sided view of Hong Kong as an economic city have certainly deepened the crises.

In conclusion, it appears that reconstructing the governing system into one that is conducive to effective governance in Hong Kong is imminent. The current executive-led government has placed the CE in a web of power relationships in which he has to strike risky but not always effectual trials of balance. Consequently, the relationship between the executive and the legislature is tense, government policies are accused of being biased towards the business circles, and the system is non-congenial to the development of political parties and not viable to nurturing a vibrant civil society in Hong Kong. As Hong Kong enters the second decade since its handover, the failure of the current system has already seen the worsening of many social problems, the rise of non-institutional and confrontational politics, and the repeated emergence of legitimacy crises. In addition to institutional reforms and changes, there is also a challenge of attitudes, as scholars have rightly put. For governance to be effective in a cosmopolitan Hong Kong, it has to come to terms with new visions of a better society, new ideas, and new challenges. After all, cosmopolitanism encompasses not only economic success but also excellence in other areas of governance such as a clean and efficient public administration, a democratic and pluralist political environment, a tolerant culture, and an equitable social environment. To achieve these, Hong Kong will have to rethink and come to grips with its identity and priorities.

Index

- 3+3 entry system 103–4
- 6-board rule 125–26
- 6-year rule 125–26
- ability-to-pay principle 261
- Accountability System for Principal Officials (ASPO) 7, 11, 28, 30, 33, 40, 89, 98–99, 166, 357, 372
- Act Now 144, 241; see also campaign
- Active Employment Assistance Programme 15
- Adjudication
  - court, 77, 79; functions of the executive, 27; the judiciary, 69, 75, 83; power of final adjudication, 24, 69, 71, 75
- administrative absorption of politics 93, 121, 127, 129
- administrative grade 87, 89, 92, 96, 98, 105
- administrative officer (AO) 25, 87–88, 91, 99, 288
  - AO party, 86, 93, 98; definition and grade structure, 90, 97, 106; political role, 92, 105
- administrative reform 3, 100, 104, 203
- administrative state 87, 89–90, 97, 127
  - state model, 91, 93, 95–105; pure administrative state, 88
- adversarial procedure 69, 83
- advisory boards and committees 123
- advisory bodies 17, 24–25, 45, 111–12, 115, 121–22, 127–28, 336, 373
- advocacy group 180, 182, 186; see also civil society
- Agency of Volunteer Service 185
- agenda-setting 232; see also mass media and public opinion
- All-China Women’s Federation 336
- All-China Youth Federation 338
- Alliance for Constitutional Development 211, 333
- Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements in China (ASPDMC) 209
- Alliance of Universal Suffrage (AUS) 144, 151–52
- American Broadcasting Corporation (ABC) 228
- Amnesty International 365
- Anti-Express Rail Protest 207–8, 214, 239–40
- anti-globalization protest 208
- anti-rich sentiment 283–84, 291–92, 375
- Antiquities Advisory Board 336
- anti-trust and fair competition law 251
- apolitical
  - civil service, 11; local government, 288
- appeal boards 122, 123
  - licensing, 123
- Apple Daily* 229, 232
- appointed member 10, 48, 113–14, 118–20, 161, 316
- Appropriation Bill 34; see also bill and Legislative Council (LegCo)
- Article 23 Concern Group 140
- Article 23 legislation 165–66, 173, 334, 343

- Article 45 Concern Group 140, 325, 335; see also Civic Party
- Asia-Pacific 233, 266, 267, 271, 272, 279
- Asia Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) 364
- Asia Television Limited (ATV) 214
- Asian Development Bank (ADB) 194, 364
- Asian Financial Crisis
civil service, 180; economic policy, 262; effect on trust in Hong Kong government, 97; elections, 168; Hong Kong and the world, 353, 356, 361; political context, 1; social policy, 278, 282, 287, 291; urban policy, 299–301, 305, 308
- Asian values 209
- Association for Democracy and People's Livelihood (ADPL) 160, 164–65
- attentive analyst 208
- autonomy
civil servant, 95; civil society, 180, 192, 193; district council, 127; Hong Kong, 13, 165, 302, 342, 351, 358, 359, 256, 258, 259, 262, 265, 266, 268, 273, 274, 276, 280; Hong Kong courts, 12; judicial autonomy, 25, 67, 73–75, 77–79, 81–83, 372; media autonomy, 229, 235–36, 243, 375; under “one country, two systems”, 3, 4, 18, 76, 288, 324, 328, 330, 343, 350, 363, 367, 376; political/state autonomy, 5, 249, 263, 270, 375; see also One Country, Two Systems
- Basic Law 2–4, 6–9, 11–13, 18, 29, 36–39, 45–46, 50, 54, 58, 67–69, 72, 76, 78–79, 81, 84, 89, 139, 149–50, 152, 162, 205, 216, 242, 277, 280, 308, 330, 333–44, 364, 377
- Basic Law
Annex I 328
Annex II 52, 54, 58, 63, 149, 155, 328
Annex III 78
- Article 2 68
- Article 11 69
- Article 13(1) 80
- Article 16 68
- Article 18 78
- Article 19 68–69, 80
- Article 23 2, 4, 7, 14, 206, 325, 358, 363
- Article 24(3) 74; see also right of abode
- Article 35 214
- Article 48 6
- Article 49 7
- Article 50 7
- Article 64 51
- Article 74 24, 52, 54, 59, 63, 372
- Article 81 68
- Article 85 68
- Article 97 115
- Article 107 253
- Article 152 363
- Article 158 75, 77, 79–80, 328 interpretation 24–25, 71, 75, 78, 81, 140, 142, 153, 165, 328, 330, 378
- Bermuda 353
- big market, small government 254, 262, 278, 289, 291
- bill 6, 8, 9, 35–36, 40, 50–54, 56, 59–60, 111, 149, 155, 162; see also Legislative Council (LegCo), private members' bill
- Bill of Rights 364
- Bill of Rights Ordinance 69
- block vote 171
- Britain 1, 3, 6, 37, 114, 200, 243, 262, 356
- British colonial government 89, 253–54, 262, 264, 288, 291, 315
- British colonial legacy 89, 92–93
- British colonial rule 1, 36, 38, 41
- British colony 18, 60, 199–200, 308, 350, 372
- British House of Commons 61
- British Virgin Islands 6, 353
- budget 6, 27, 30, 34–37, 51, 103–4, 214, 254, 259, 286, 291–92, 313

- budget, approval 27, 50
- budget, balanced 253, 280; see also Basic Law, Article 107
- budget debate 52
- budget, deficit 253, 280, 300
- budget speech 34
- budget, surplus 253, 280
- bureau 7, 28, 32–34, 54, 61, 90, 92, 96, 98–99, 122, 235
- Bureau, Civil Service 40, 91, 101–3
- Bureau, Commerce and Economic Development 32, 235
- Bureau, Constitutional and Mainland Affairs 32, 120
- Bureau, Economic Development and Labour 290, 363
- Bureau, Education 101, 339
- Bureau, Environment 32
- Bureau, Home Affairs 122, 234–35, 337
- Bureau, Public Security (in Mainland) 74
- Bureau, Transport and Housing 32
- bureau secretary 8, 28, 30–34, 37, 40
- Bureau, Security 61, 90
- bureaucracy 38, 88–90, 93, 96–97, 105–6, 263–64
  - anti-bureaucracy, 98
- bureaucrat 11, 28, 37–38, 88, 91–93, 105, 127, 253, 263, 313, 326, 372
- bureaucrat-dominated system 88–90, 97, 372
- bureaucratic governance 88
- bureaucratic polity 88
- Bush, US President 360
- business conservative 160
  - pro-China, 161
- business sector 46, 162, 169, 181, 183, 191–92, 194, 305–6, 308
  - elections in electoral committee and functional constituencies, 164, 167, 171; Japanese business sector, 361; subsidizing labour cost, 269, 289
- business tycoons 362
- businessman-ruling model 264
- business-politician 89
  - CE, 33; LegCo, 149–52, 209, 332–33
- cabinet 27–28, 30, 33
- Cable Television 227
- cadres 330
- campaign 116–18, 120, 141, 145, 149–151, 170, 173, 181, 187–88, 193, 202, 208–10, 213–14, 225, 283, 290, 310, 325, 333, 374
  - Act Now, 144, 241; Tsang, Donald Yum-kuen, 33; see also campaign strategy and signature campaign
- Campaign for Rent Control 202
- campaign strategy 134, 169
- Cao, Erbao 330
- capital market, its globalization 306
- capitalism 179, 298, 318
  - capitalism in Hong Kong, 3, 18, 251, 301 310; crony capitalism, 264, 378; productivist welfare capitalism, 278
- capitalist 139, 298, 301, 310, 314, 316
  - capitalist enclave, 349, 361; pro-Beijing, 139
- capitalist system 18, 303
- catch-all parties 165, 175
- Catholic Church in Hong Kong 238
- Census and Statistics Department 234
- Central Authorities 25, 139, 329–30, 340–41, 372
- central business district (CBD) 310, 313
- Central Kowloon Route Project (CKR) 56
- Central People's Government (CPG) 3, 4, 12–15, 17, 29–30, 40, 58, 71–73, 75, 80–81, 87, 89, 105, 134, 137–39, 142–45, 149, 151–54, 159, 164–65, 168, 173, 207, 249, 256, 264–65, 270, 278–79, 288–91, 324–37, 340–43, 358–60, 363–64, 373, 375–77
- Central People's Government Liaison Office (LO) 4, 12, 152, 207, 329
- Central Policy Unit (CPU) 7, 31, 195, 234, 291, 335, 337, 344
- Centre for Health Protection 285

- Centum Charitas Foundation 336–38 chambers of commerce 171, 180, 307, 355
 Chan, Albert 16, 141, 150, 170
 Chan, Anson Fang On-sang 31, 92
 Chan, Tanya 150
 Chan, Wing-kee 209
 Chan, Yuen-han 289 charitable organizations 56
 Chen, Rock 338
 Cheng, Albert 211, 215
 Cheng, Andrew 118, 164, 169
 Cheung, Anthony 7, 12, 215
 Cheung, Tze-keung (Big Spender) Case 71
 Chief Executive (CE) 6, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, 27, 39–40, 46, 74, 137, 224, 332; see also Tsang, Donald Yam-kuen and Tung, Chee-hwa
 Chief Executive, by-election 33
 Chief Executive (CE) election 4, 8, 13, 29, 35, 118
 Chief Executive (CE) in Council 32, 291
 Chief Executive (CE), term of office 6
 Chief Executive Election Bill 13
 Chief Executive (CE) Election Committee 29; see also Election Committee for the Chief Executive
 Chief Executive Election Ordinance 161
 Chief Executive's Office 24, 28, 30
 Chief Executive Ordinance 377
 Chief Secretary for Administration (CS) 2, 11, 14, 28, 92, 317, 336
 China authoritarian regime, 5; China factor, 168, 350, 358; Chinese market, 361; Communist China, 1; Hong Kong's relations with China, 116; Hong Kong's trade relations with China, 6; State Council, 215, 326
 Chinese Campaign 202
 Chinese Central Television (CCTV) 244
 Chinese Communist Party (CCP) 137, 153, 288–89, 334–35, 338, 350, 367
 Chinese Communist Youth League 338
 Chinese Embassy, the bombing in Belgrade in 1999 359
 Chinese Exporter Association 338
 Chineseness 199, 205
 Chinese People's Consultative Committee 171
 Chinese University of Hong Kong (CUHK) 143
 Choi Yuen Village 313, 315
 Chou, En-lai 202
 Choy, So-yuk 12
 Chu, Winston 310
 Chung Hwa Travel Service 6 citizen participation 182, 184–85, 192, 317
 Citizens' Party 161
 Citizens' Radio 12, 212
 Citizenship 14, 135, 186, 193 city of protests 239 civic associations 224, 243
 civic education 186, 205, 336–37, 339
 Civic Exchange 2, 214
 Civic Party (CP) 13, 16, 118, 140, 163, 207, 325; see also Article 45 Concern Group
 CIVICUS Civil Society Index 182–85
 Civil Human Rights Front 240 civil law legal system 75 civil liberties 165 civil organization 238, 240 civil servant
   as guardian of public interest, 7, 11, 25, 28, 31–32, 38, 40, 48, 87–98, 101, 103–5, 166, 203–4, 288, 336, 372; political neutrality, 3; see also Accountability System for Principal Officials (ASPO), civil service, and civil service system civil servants' salaries movement 204 civil service 11, 17, 24–25, 30, 40, 59, 87–97, 99, 101, 103–5, 163, 165, 264, 357, 367, 371–72 civil service reform 17, 25, 90, 97–98, 100, 103–4, 165–66, 372 civil service system 25, 92, 98, 103–4, 372

- disciplinary action, 93, 95; ideals of civil service system, 105; non-civil service contract, 103; voluntary retirement scheme, 101, 103
- civil society 15, 17, 90, 134–35, 143, 249, 292, 318, 371, 374, 378
- civil society organization (CSO), 134, 181, 194; the concept, 179–81; in Hong Kong; 181–83, 194; Hong Kong Civil Society Index, 184; international civil society, 363
- Close Encounters of a Political Kind* 211
- Closer Economic Partnership Arrangement (CEPA) 5, 139, 265, 267, 271, 305, 326, 329, 341, 365
- Codex Alimentarius Commission 363
- collective action 135, 202–3, 208, 212–13, 224, 238, 239–43
- colonial legacy 3, 89, 92–93, 270
- Commission on Poverty 287, 292
- Commission on Strategic Development 8, 31, 318, 336–37
- Commission on Youth 122
- Committee on the Promotion of Civic Education 336–37; see also civic education
- Common Law system 24, 71, 75
- Community Care Fund 191
- Community Chest 185
- Community Investment and Inclusion Fund 191
- community participation 298, 316–17
- community-based organization (CBO) 194–95
- compact city model 302
- Comprehensive Social Security Assistance (CSSA) 14, 189, 286–87, 292
- Confucianism 209, 278
- Congo, Democratic Republic 79, 328
- conscience of Hong Kong 93, 372
- Consensus 31, 33, 39, 105, 122, 138, 165, 226, 263, 291, 304, 324, 327, 343–44, 376
- consensus politics, 128; political consensus, 111
- Constitution 36, 73, 217, 234
- Constitution of the People's Republic of China, Article 67(4), 71; constitutionalism in China, 25, 82, 372; constitutionality, 25, 82, 372; constitutionality, constitutional conventions, 45, 67, 72–73, 78; constitutional crisis, 73; constitutional development, 4, 140, 211, 332; constitutional law and order, 37, 75, 77, 79, 82; constitutional power, 29–30, 39, 51, 56, 75, 82, 90, 328; constitutional reform, 8, 10, 16, 25, 46, 49, 114, 119, 134, 163–64, 331, 327, 373
- Constitutional Development Task Force 35, 159
- consultative politics 25, 121, 127, 373
- contract out 101
- Cooperative Resource Center (CRC) 161; see also Liberal Party
- Cooptees 4
- core values, Hong Kong 16, 87, 217, 374
- Coroner's Court 70
- Correctional Services Department 90, 101
- corruption 83, 167; see also Independent Commission Against Corruption (ICAC)
- Corruption Perceptions Index (CPI) 94
- cost recovery 101
- Council for Sustainable Development (CSD) 317, 336
- Court of Appeal 70, 311
- Court of Final Appeal (CFA) 11, 24, 50, 69, 70–81, 165, 312, 328
- Court of First Instance 70, 215, 312
- courts 12, 25, 46, 68–69, 71, 74, 76–84, 163, 215–16, 310, 312, 315, 328, 342, 359
- clash of jurisdiction between HKSAR courts and Mainland courts, 71–72; structure of HKSAR courts, 70
- crime 298–99; organized crimes, 360
- crisis
- budget crisis, 259; constitutional crisis, 73; economic crisis, 309;

- global financial crisis, 2, 240; legitimacy crisis, 104; local financial crisis, 263, 265, 267; political crisis, 325–26, 342; SARS crisis, 97, 339; urban crisis, 298; see also Asian financial crisis
- crony capitalism 264, 378
- cronyism 16
- cross-boundary 195, 340–42
- cultural heritage 16
- cultural identity 200, 205
- Culture and Heritage Commission 122
- Curriculum Development Council 14, 205
- Customs and Excise Department 90
- cyber-based mobilization 183, 193
- cyber groups 193
- Cyberport 1, 257, 262, 264
- Dalai Lama 360
- Daya Bay Nuclear Plant 160, 203–4
- deep-rooted contradictions 290, 326–27, 341, 343
- de-facto referendum 149
- Defend Diaoyutai Movement 202
- defense 255
- de-industrialization 267
- deinstitutionalization 104
- democracy 3, 16, 45, 88–90, 92, 111, 118–19, 137, 139–42, 145–46, 153–54, 159, 165, 169, 173, 182, 186, 203, 209, 212, 224, 241–42, 250, 264, 330, 333, 373–74
- Beijing democracy movement, 160; democracy movement, 5, 13, 17, 134, 138, 151, 153, 160, 168; representative democracy, 119, 129; surrogate democracy, 235, 374
- democrat 12–13, 16, 48–49, 63, 117, 119–20, 138, 144, 146, 149–51, 153–54, 160–61, 163–64, 168–74, 210, 212, 216
- Democratic Alliance for the Betterment and Progress of Hong Kong (DAB) (formerly the Democratic Alliance for the Betterment of Hong Kong) 48, 117, 145, 150, 161, 163–66, 168–73, 175, 329, 333, 335–36, 339
- democratic development 2, 140, 150, 153, 183
- democratic government 11, 204, 224
- Democratic Party (DP) 5, 7, 16, 48, 117, 134, 138, 161, 238
- democratic politics 25, 127
- Democratic Progressive Party, Taiwan 5
- democratic reform 137, 147, 151, 153, 173, 210, 373
- democratization 2, 6, 16, 87–89, 92–93, 105, 114, 120–21, 127–28, 134, 137–39, 141–43, 149–51, 153, 159, 165–66, 207, 238–39, 242, 265, 291, 330, 332, 334, 373, 378; democratization and civil society, 183; democratization and media, 225–27, 232
- demonstration 2, 4, 12, 15, 137–38, 179, 187, 193, 200, 204, 207–8, 211, 216, 218, 231, 239, 265, 334, 374; see also July First Demonstration
- Deng, Xiaoping 18
- Department for Environmental Protection 304
- Department of Justice 34, 72, 364
- depoliticization 14, 94, 204
- developmental state 263
- digital activism 15, 212–14, 217, 374
- direct election, see election
- directly elected members (District Councils) 10, 113–14, 116, 121
- directorship post 30, 32
- discursive participation 15, 204, 211
- Disney, Hong Kong 228, 262
- District Councils (DC) (formerly the District Boards) 10, 17, 29, 110, 112–21, 127–28, 141, 145, 148, 154–55, 165, 167, 173, 234, 317, 329, 371, 373
- 2006 Review, 119
- District Council election 115–17, 155, 187, 209
- District Council Functional Constituency (DCFC)

- election method, 120; see also functional constituency (FC)
- District Court 70, 342
- District Management Committee (DMC) 113
- domestic export 354
- downsizing 100, 104
- Du, Qinglin 338
- Dynamic Star International Limited 314

- East Asia 278, 299, 305–6, 362
- East Week* 223
- economic development 2, 30, 55, 93, 209, 216, 260, 262–65, 269–70
  - bureaucratic-led economic development, 263
- economic functions of the public sector
  - allocation, 252, 255–56; redistribution, 252, 254–56, 261, 269; stabilization, 252–53; see also fiscal policy and monetary policy
- economic integration 5, 139, 265, 305, 309, 324, 328, 339, 341–43, 366, 376
  - definition, 272; negative consequences of economic integration with China, 267–68
- economic pragmatism 249, 278, 284, 291, 375
- Economic Synergy 16, 163
- economic transformation 263, 270, 341
- Economist Intelligence Unit (EIU) 357
- economy-first ideology 377
- editorial independence, principle of 13; see also RTHK
- e-government 104–5
- Elderly Health Care Voucher Pilot Scheme 285
- election
  - block vote, 115, 167, 171; direct election, 46, 88, 129, 134, 145–46, 155, 159, 163, 167, 169, 171, 173–74, 203; see also small circle election
- Election Committee 46–47, 116, 161
  - Election Committee for the Chief Executive 2, 29, 112, 139, 154
  - election, Chief Executive, see Chief Executive (CE) election
  - election, District Council, see District Council election
  - election, Legislative Council, see Legislative Council (LegCo) election
- Electoral Affairs Commission 123
- electoral system 17, 49, 113, 120, 134, 159, 166, 170, 174, 224, 371
  - corporate elector, 29, 147;
  - corporate votes, 147, 149, 171, 174, 332, 334; directly-elected seats, 8, 172–73, 203, 209; proportional representation, 37, 134, 169, 174–75; same list of candidates, 171
- Electronic Road Pricing system 318
- elite
  - business elite, 93, 333, 336–38, 351; elitist rule, 3; pro-Beijing elite, 4, 334–35, 337–39, 342; socio-economic elite, 38, 92, 121–22, 129, 208, 233, 307, 327, 336–37, 342–43, 372, 376
- e-mobilization 214
- Employee Retraining Scheme 287
- Enhanced Productivity Programme (EPP) 104
- environmental conservation 16
- e-politics 214
- E-Politics 21 214
- equal opportunity 124–26, 279, 378
- equity
  - fiscal equity, 258; gender equity, 182; negative equity, 210, 300–1, 309; rules of equity, 68–69, 83, 102, 256, 261, 270, 308
- equity-efficiency trade-off 256, 271
- establishment team 330
- estate duty 258
- Eu, Audrey Yuet-mee 140, 144, 151, 154, 170
- EU–Hong Kong readmission agreement 363

- Europe, European countries 243, 270, 358, 362–63
- European Consulates 362
- European Parliament 362
- European Union (EU) 349, 353–54, 362–63
- excess burden 253, 270
- executive 6–7, 9–11, 17, 24, 27–28, 30, 32–37, 39, 41, 45, 48–49, 57, 59–61, 68, 82, 84, 89–90, 101, 121–22, 128, 163, 316, 329, 371, 373, 378
- executive authorities 40, 68, 77, 83
- Executive Council (ExCo) 7, 8, 11, 24, 30, 31, 34, 39–40, 88–89, 264, 330, 335
- executive-driven government 24
- executive-led government 3, 11, 24, 36, 40–41, 371, 378
- executive-led principle 6, 11
- executive-legislature relation 11, 36, 41, 99; see also legislative-executive relationship
- export market 354
- externalities 255–56, 271
- Facebook 15, 214, 243
- factionalism 162, 174
- Falun Gong 13, 358, 362
- Family Court 70
- Fan, Rita 173, 175, 335
- Financial Action Task Force 360
- Financial Secretary (FS) 28, 30–32, 34–35
- Fire Services Department 90, 101
- fiscal policy 252–53
- fiscal reserve 253
- fiscal system 251, 257–58, 261, 269, 375
- Five Year Plan (FYP) 340
National 12th Five Year Plan, 344
- Food and Environmental Hygiene Department 101, 363
- foreign reserve 253
- free market ideology 254
- free port 350, 365
- free trade 365
- Free Trade Agreement (FTA) 271
- freedom 5, 18, 73, 76, 90, 153, 165, 180, 206, 209, 255, 349, 351 freedom of assembly, 362; economic freedom, 251; individual freedom, 2, 3, 83; press freedom, 12–13, 229–30, 233, 241–42; freedom of speech, 16, 351
- Friends of Tailongwan 213
- Friday news dump 238
- Frontier 117, 161, 362
- functional constituency (FC) 35, 116, 118, 121
District Council (DCFC), 10, 49, 112, 116, 118, 148, 120, 127; FC election, 171–73; FC electors, 210; FC members, 9, 10, 55, 58; FC seats, 8, 49, 146, 151, 161, 166–67, 171, 174, 332, 334; FC system, 118, 161, 166–67; see also Legislative Council (LegCo), functional constituencies (FCs)
- Fung, Kim-kee 144
- Future Star Federation of Students 338
- Gazette 51
- GDP 102–3, 137, 182, 251, 256–57, 261, 265–66, 268, 271, 281, 286, 300, 308
- gender benchmark principle 125–26
- generalist 92, 96, 106, 263
- geographical constituency 8, 9, 35, 46–47, 140, 164, 203, 213, 331
- get the job done 288
- Gini coefficient 1, 2
- Gini index 261
- Global Competitiveness Ranking 264, 267
- globalization 97, 208, 306, 324, 350, 366–67, 377
- governance system 249, 270
- governing coalition, of the CE 29, 34–36, 39
- governing ideologies 10, 15, 269
- governing party 93, 146
- government expenditure 51, 57, 166
- Government Secretariat 30, 364
- government-proposed legislation 63

- governor 3, 11, 33, 36, 41, 45, 48, 59–60, 88, 113, 203, 229, 279, 339;
see also Patten, Christopher
- grade, in the civil service 87, 89–93, 96–99, 103, 105–6, 264
- Grand Promenade 215
- Green Radio 212
- Group of Twenty (G-20) 363
- growth machine thesis 249, 297, 307, 318, 376
- Guangdong 267, 327, 335, 338–42, 344
- Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macao Quality
Living Area 341
- Hare quota 166, 169, 175
- Harvard Review, of health care 285, 292
- health policy 284–86
- Health Protection Scheme (HPS)
285–86, 292
- healthcare system 284–85
- Heritage Foundation 251
- Heung Yee Kuk 47, 154, 167, 171
- High Court 50, 70
- High Court, Chief Judge 50
- high land price policy 259
- Highway Department (HD) 56
- HKReporter 214
- Ho, Cyd 16, 170
- home ownership 282, 299, 300–1, 312
- Home Ownership Scheme (HOS) 100, 120, 254, 282, 292, 300
- Hong Kong Affairs Society (HKAS) 160
- Hong Kong Alliance in Support of Patriotic Democratic Movements of China 160, 209
- Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office
(HKMAO) 333
- Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Work
Coordination Group 326
- Hong Kong and Macao Research Institute 326
- Hong Kong Arts Development Council
336
- Hong Kong Association for Democracy and People's Livelihood 48
- Hong Kong Confederation of Trade Unions (HKCTU) 165, 289
- Hong Kong Council of Social Service
192, 261, 286
- Hong Kong core values 16, 87, 217, 374
- Hong Kong dollar 255, 269
- Hong Kong Economic, Trade and Cultural Office 6
- Hong Kong Examinations and Assessment Authority 337
- Hong Kong Federation of Trade Unions (HKFTU) 161, 289, 163, 165
- Hong Kong–Guangdong Cooperation
340–41, 344
- Hong Kong–Guangdong Cooperation
Joint Conference 339
- Hong Kong–Guangdong Youth
Exchange Promotion Association
338
- Hong Kong Jockey Club 185
- Hong Kong Labour Party 16
- Hong Kong Monetary Authority
(HKMA) 253–54, 300, 309, 363
- Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong 18
- Hong Kong Police Force 90, 94, 101
- Hong Kong Policy Act, of the US 1992, 6, 358, 360
- Hong Kong Professional Teachers'
Union 151
- Hong Kong Progressive Alliance
(HKPA) 48, 161, 165, 171; see also Democratic Alliance for the Betterment and Progress of Hong Kong (DAB)
- Hong Kong–Shenzhen–Guangzhou
Express Rail Link 283, 313, 340
- Hong Kong Social Security Society 289
- Hong Kong Stock Exchange 308, 355, 366
- Hong Kong Trade Development Council 122, 336, 355, 361
- Hong Kong United Youth Association 338
- Hong Kong University Public Opinion
Poll (HKUPOP) 143
- Hong Kong Volunteers Association 338

- Hong Kong Youth Exchange
Promotion United Association 338
- Hong Kong–Zhuhai–Macau Bridge
340–41
- Hong Konger, Hongkongese 141, 153,
200, 205–6, 217
- Hospital Authority 58, 101, 122, 336
- housing 1, 8, 30, 33, 54, 100, 112, 202, 248, 254, 260, 278, 280, 283–84,
291–92, 297–99, 311–18
Home Ownership Scheme (HOS),
100, 120, 254, 282, 292, 300; My Home Purchase Plan, 284, 286,
301; public expenditure, 281;
Tenant Purchase Scheme (TPS), 282; see also housing policy and public housing
- Housing Authority 102, 215, 282, 299
- Housing Department 101
- Housing Ordinance 70
Housing (Amendment) Ordinance
312
- housing policy 282, 286, 291, 301–2
- Hu, Jintao 329, 332
- Hui, Rafael 336
- human rights 12, 24–25, 67, 69, 74,
77–78, 165, 194, 351, 358, 362, 364,
372
- Immigration 358, 362; see also right of abode
- Immigration Ordinance 72, 74, 215
- immigration, quota system 74
- Immigration Department 90, 101
- Impeach, the Chief Executive 50
- Import and Export (Strategic Commodities) Ordinance 359
- import market 354
- In-media 212, 214
- Independent Commission Against Corruption (ICAC) 94
- Individual Visit Scheme 265, 326
- industrial policy 248, 251, 262
- industrialization 263; see also
re-industrialization
- Information Services Department
(ISD) 235
- institutional conscience 94–95, 103–5
- institutionalization of business in politics 264
- interest articulation 18, 92, 318
- interest groups 167, 238, 249, 297, 302, 314, 329, 376
- interest intermediation 249, 299, 376,
- interest rate 253–54, 300
- International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) 69, 128, 146, 364
- International Covenant on Economic Social and Cultural Rights
(ICESCR) 364
- international NGO (INGO) 365
- internationalization 18, 352, 363, 366–67, 377
- Internet 104, 126, 212–14, 223, 243
- Internet radio 214
- intervention, active 3–5, 90, 93, 100,
134, 138–40, 143, 168, 202, 254,
257, 260, 262–63, 278, 282, 284, 298, 309, 329, 373; see also positive non-intervention
- investment income 259
- investment, outward direct 6, 353, 361
- Ip, Regina Lau Suk-yea 16, 90, 99, 163
- Islam investment 366
- Japan 137, 257, 263, 268, 278, 349, 354, 358–62
- Japanese government 361
- Joint Committee for the Promotion of Democratic Government (JCPDG)
160
- journalism 15, 212, 217, 227, 242, 374
- journalism, market-driven 229
- journalist 211–12, 226–31, 233, 235–37, 240–42
- journalistic professionalism 228, 230, 242
- judge 7, 11, 50, 70, 80, 83
- judicial authority 69, 78–79, 81 Cheung, Tze-keung (“Big Spender”) case, 71
- judicial autonomy 25, 67, 74–75, 77–79, 81–82, 372

- Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, London 71
- judicial deliberation 77
- judicial immunity 68
- judicial independence 24, 68, 77–78, 83
- judicial reasoning 69
- judicial review 68–69, 214–16, 311–12, 374
- judicial system 67
- judiciary 10, 17, 24–25, 27, 67–83
  - struggle, 67; see also legal system
- July 1 demonstration, rally 2, 134, 138–40, 143, 179, 208, 239, 265, 334
- June Fourth incident, candlelight vigil 116, 207, 232; see also Tiananmen incident
- jurisdiction 12, 27, 61, 68–69, 70, 215, 235, 304, 328, 359, 372
  - conflict of jurisdiction, 71–73
- jury 70
- justice 34, 71, 78, 83, 95, 249, 376
  - social justice, 299, 312, 315
- Juvenile Court 70

- Keynesian approach 253
- Kowloon-Canton Railway Corporation (KCR) 302

- labour-intensive 104
  - campaign, 169
- labour rights 48, 239
- Labour Tribunal 70
- laissez-faire economic policy 3, 277
- Lam, Jeffrey 16
- Lam, Stephen 5
- Lam, Sze-tat 314
- land interest 302, 316
- land premium 258–59
- land sales 259, 300, 302
- Land Surveyors Registration Committee 123
- Lands Tribunal 70
- Largest Remainder method 166
- Lau, Chin-shek 161
- Lau, Emily Wai-hing 35, 161, 164
- Lau, Siu-kai 200, 291, 335, 344

- law enforcement 28, 32, 358, 360
- Law, Fanny 336
- lawmaking 24
- lawyer 11, 70–71, 242
- leadership 11, 27, 38, 67, 81–82, 88, 97, 121, 137, 183–84, 249, 288, 291, 326, 329, 338, 351–52, 375
  - under CE Tsang, 104; under CE Tung, 7
- Lee, Allen Peng-fei 161
- Lee, Cheuk-yan 16, 161, 289
- Lee, Martin Chu-ming 58, 160, 170
- Lee, Peter Ka-kit 337
- Lee, Shau-kee 337
- Lee, Teng-hui 5
- Lee, Wing-tat 170
- legal proceedings 68
- legal professional 15
- legal system 11, 24, 75, 83, 342, 372, 378
  - fundamental principles, 67–71
- Legislative Council (LegCo) 7–10, 16–17, 24, 27, 29, 33, 37, 39–41, 45–46, 159, 188, 202–3, 216, 234, 257, 282, 314, 317, 325, 332, 364
  - split voting system, 139; see also legislative-executive relation
- Legislative Council (LegCo), bills committee 51
- Legislative Council (LegCo), committee and panel systems 24, 59–60, 372
- Legislative Council (LegCo), debate 50, 52–53, 57–58, 61
- Legislative Council (LegCo), election 3, 4, 35, 45–46, 48, 118, 140, 160, 168, 171, 173, 175, 187, 203, 209, 213–14, 325, 329–32
- Legislative Council (LegCo), Finance Committee 31, 51, 53–54
- Legislative Council (LegCo), functional constituencies (FCs) 3, 8, 10, 35, 46, 49, 52, 58–59, 139–40, 142–43, 146–49, 155
- Legislative Council (LegCo), functions 17, 24, 48, 50, 53–54, 372; see also Legislative Council (LegCo), powers

- Legislative Council (LegCo), geographical constituencies (GCs) 8, 9, 46, 59, 142–3, 146, 149, 155
- Legislative Council (LegCo), motion 9, 29, 35, 52–53, 57–58, 60, 62, 149, 155, 289
- Legislative Council (LegCo), non-permanent panel 53
- Legislative Council (LegCo), panel 24, 53–55, 57, 59–62, 120, 125–6, 372
- Legislative Council (LegCo), powers 17, 24, 45–46, 50, 53–54; see also Legislative Council (LegCo), functions
- Legislative Council (LegCo), president 45, 51, 53, 56, 335
- Legislative Council (LegCo), private members' bill 8, 52, 59, 149
- Legislative Council (LegCo), Public Accounts Committee 53, 215
- Legislative Council (LegCo) Secretariat 59, 61–62
- Legislative Council (LegCo), select committee 8, 53–54, 57
- Legislative Council (LegCo), separate vote count system, separate voting mechanism 8–9, 54, 56, 58–59
- Legislative Council (LegCo), standing committee 53, 60–61
- legislative-executive relationship 9, 10; see also executive-legislature relation
- legislator 8–9, 12, 16, 34–35, 46, 48, 50–57, 59–63, 118, 120, 140, 144, 147–50, 154, 162–63, 166–68, 207, 207–10, 216, 234, 315, 325, 331–36, 372
- monthly allowance, 62
- legislature 6–10, 24, 27, 30, 36–37, 39, 45–46, 50, 52–55, 59–63, 69, 82–83, 134, 137–41, 144–46, 149, 152, 159, 162–63, 168, 174, 224, 234, 308, 330, 362, 371–74, 377–78
- legitimacy 92, 121, 262
- legislature, 46; legitimacy crisis, 7, 104, 378; political appointment system, 37; political parties, 163; Provisional Legislative Council, 46
- legitimation 233, 241
- Lei Tung Street 181
- Leisure and Cultural Services Department 101
- Leong, Alan 29, 140, 150, 154, 325
- Leung, Antony Kam-Chung 99
- Leung, Chin-man 54
- Leung, Chun-ying 8, 27, 29 335
- Leung, Elsie Oi-sie 152, 335
- Leung, Kwok Hung (Long hair) 141, 163, 212, 216
- Li, Gang 152, 334
- Li, Ka-shing 209, 257, 362
- Li, Keqiang 5
- Li Po Chun Charitable Trust Fund Committee 123
- Li, Richard Tzar-kai 257
- liberal democracy 52, 186
- media, 227
- Liberal Democratic Foundation (LDF) 160, 161
- Liberal Party (LP) 7, 16, 35, 117, 138–39, 150, 153, 161, 163, 166, 171, 173, 325, 333–34, 336
- liberalism, neo 279, 305
- Licensing Appeal Board 123
- Link Corporation 308
- Liquefied Petroleum Gas (LPG) 303
- Liquor Licensing Board 123
- Liu, Xiaobo 12
- Liu, Yandong 334, 338
- local government 10, 25, 373
- local identity 200
- Loh, Christine 161, 310
- London 41, 71, 203, 306, 363, 366
- Long Hair 163, 212; see also Leung Kwok Hung
- low tax regime 301, 355
- lower income group 260–61, 269
- Lu, Annette Hsiu-lien 227
- Lump Sum Grant 191–92
- Ma, Lik 161
- Ma On Shan Rail Link 303

- Ma, Ying-jeou 5
- Macao 326, 329, 334, 340–41
- Maclehose, Murray 3
- Made by Hong Kong (Report) 309
- Magistrate's Court 70
- mandate 9, 46
- Mandatory Provident Fund (MPF) 35, 257
- manufacturing sector 265
- March for Democracy 333
- marginalization 17, 183, 192
- market economy 248, 251, 257, 269, 375
- market failure 252
- marriage law 202
- mass media 30, 134–35, 151, 223, 226, 371, 374
- commercialism, 228; editorial autonomy, 243; media autonomy, 13; mediated public opinion, 223, 171; self-censorship, 13, 229–31, 233, 241, 377; tabloidization, 229
- Mass Transit Railway (MTR) 101, 123, 256, 302, 228–29
- maximum working hours law 251
- media effect 135, 231
- agenda-setting, 232
- media effect, legitimation 233, 241
- media effect, omission 230, 233
- media effect, publicity 233, 235, 242
- media organization 224, 227–28, 230, 236, 366
- media professionalism 135, 227, 241–42
- mediating institutions 17, 134–35, 373–74
- Medium-Rent-to-Income-Ratio (MRIR) 312
- Meeting Point (MP) 7, 160, 203
- merit 50, 94–95, 124–25, 200, 290
- middle class 163, 165, 239, 259, 261, 269, 282–83, 291, 301, 303, 309, 317, 334
- Ming Pao* 229
- minimum wage 165, 251, 277, 279, 289–92
- ministerial system 99
- Ministry of Foreign Affairs 80–81
- Minor Employment Claims Adjudication Board 70
- monetary policy 252–55, 265
- pegging between HK dollars and US dollars, 254–55, 269
- monopolistic 102, 264, 378
- monopoly 99, 137
- motion news 229
- Murdoch, Rupert 229
- mutual aid committee 204
- My Home Purchase Plan 284, 286, 301
- National 12th Five Year Plan 344
- national education 14, 205, 328, 337–39
- National Education Centre 339
- National Flag and National Emblem Ordinance 78
- national law 78, 84
- National People's Congress (NPC) 4, 29, 46, 84, 171, 209, 236, 327, 364
- National People's Congress Standing Committee (SCNPC) 4, 49, 69, 84, 118, 140, 165, 328
- April 26 decision, 59;
- interpretation of the Basic Law, 11, 25, 75–76, 105, 328;
- re-interpretation of the Basic Law, 140
- National People's Congress, Hong Kong's delegates 4, 29, 46, 84, 154, 171, 209, 236, 364
- national reunification 5, 139
- national security legislation 12, 165, 225, 238–39, 325
- National Security (Legislative Provisions) Bill 35, 138–40, 143, 153, 179–80, 206
- nationalism 14
- Nationalist Party, Taiwan 5
- negative equity 210, 300–1, 309
- neo-classical economist 300
- neo-Confucianism 209
- Neo Democrats 16
- neoliberalism 305
- neutrality 3, 94, 227, 242
- New People's Party 16, 163
- new media 213, 237, 243

- new public management (NPM) 25, 87, 98, 100, 103, 105
- New Territories 47, 169–70, 304
 District Councils, 29, 113; Regional Council, 10, 114, 159, 203, 377
- newly industrialized countries (NICs) 268
- Next Magazine* 223
- non-governmental organization (NGO) 134, 180–82, 191, 194, 289, 317, 364–65
- non-interventionist 262, 277
- nonprofit organization (NPO) 195
- non-statutory bodies 122
- non-tariff barrier 5
- non-tax revenue 259, 269
- no-objection notice 12
- Obama, US President 360
- Obscene Articles Tribunal 70
- occasional participants 208
- office on mind-games 237
- offline social movement 213
- off-shore Renminbi centre 340
- Old Age Allowance (OAA) 50, 286
- “One China” policy 14
- One Country, Two Systems 3, 5, 17–18, 58, 67, 76, 81, 139, 149, 165, 241, 265, 288, 292, 324, 337, 343–44, 350, 359, 362–63, 371, 376, 378
- one-person-one-vote 46
- one person two votes 146, 334
- one-way exit permit 74
- open-door policy 265
- open-source politics 212
- opinion leader 241
- Our Home Our Country 338
- OurTV 212, 214
- Oxfam 365
- pan-democrat 117, 119–20, 138, 144–46, 149–51, 153–54, 210, 216, 332–34; see also democrat
- Pan-Pearl River Development 340
- Pareto efficiency 271
- Partnership Fund for the Disadvantaged 191
- party, catch-all parties 165, 175
- party affiliation, Chief Executive 146
- party consolidation 162
- party development 134, 159, 161, 174
- party discipline 162
- party formation 17, 160
- party label 171
- party politics 38, 111, 121, 159, 161–63, 174, 242
- party system 38–39, 105, 159, 371 underdevelopment, 99
- patriotism 14, 205–6, 328–29, 337–38, 374
- Patten, Christopher 3, 10 political reform, 46, 88, 113–14, 119, 160, 203, 229, 279
- pay of civil service 95, 100 pay cut, 104; see also civil service
- PCCW 257
- Pearl River Delta 291, 304, 309, 340, 341, 343
- Pearl River Delta (PRD) economic cooperation 265, 267
- pedestrianization 303
- People’s Power 16, 207–8
- People’s Republic of China (PRC) 3, 5, 71, 76, 79–80, 82, 84, 137, 349, 363
- performance pay 103
- performance pledge 3
- permanent secretary 7, 32, 54, 99, 336
- pluralism 9, 238, 241–42, 374
- pluralistic 92, 181, 226, 234, 238
- pluralistic democracy 92
- policy address 31, 33, 50, 52, 100, 207, 254, 278–79, 282, 284, 287, 301, 317, 336–38, 344
- policy advocacy group 180
- policy agenda 30, 34, 49, 54–57, 63, 303, 317
- policy bureau 28, 33, 61, 90, 96, 98
- policy coordination 99, 326, 339, 340, 342
- policy environment 17, 248, 355, 375
- policy formulation 27, 28, 30, 33, 242, 279
- policy implementation 11, 28, 32, 87
- policy planning 30

- Politburo Standing Committee 326, 335 political accountability 40, 87, 89, 98, 99 political activism 14, 135, 199, 204, 206–8, 217, 374; see also social activism political actor 11, 15, 17, 25, 82, 89, 105, 128, 134, 223, 226, 239, 343, 373, 376 political affiliation 125, 127, 141, 146–47, 332, 336 political apathy 135, 201, 203–4 political appointee 11, 40, 89, 98, 99 political appointment system 8, 28, 37–38, 40, 99, 330 political assistant 8, 37 political commentary groups 203 political communication process 226 political consensus 111
 Political Consultative Conference 154, 209, 236, 327 political environment 17, 18, 25, 87, 127, 199, 324, 373, 376, 379 political group 7, 16, 39, 154, 159–62, 174, 208, 210, 241, 373 political grouping 164, 166, 174, 334, 374 political handover 9, 12, 17, 24, 135, 199, 203, 209, 215, 217, 374, 378 political helplessness 141 political identity 17, 134–35, 199–200, 204–5, 216–17 political influence of business tycoons, 89; of property sector, 300; of public opinion poll, 224; rentiers, 302 political institution 17, 24–25, 38, 71, 134, 141, 167, 211, 336, 371 political interests 278 political leader 32, 39, 162, 224, 227, 231, 233, 237, 254, 371, 375 political liberalization 367, 377 political mobilization 92, 116, 200, 208, 213; see also social mobilization political neutrality 3, 94 political participation 15, 17, 135, 187, 199, 201, 204, 206, 208–9, 214, 217–18, 374; see also citizen participation and public participation political party 15–17, 38–40, 48, 93, 105, 146, 160–61, 174, 226, 328 political recruitment 38–39, 162 political reform 3, 46, 97, 105, 112, 116, 118–20, 137–38, 140, 143–45, 148–154, 174, 240–41, 329–35, 373–74, 378 political reform package, 2012 112, 116, 118, 138, 143 political society 16, 140 political structure 9, 51–52, 60, 90 polls 3–4, 8–9, 16 polling industry, 224; see also public opinion poll popular revolt 333 positive non-intervention 253, 262, 270, 278, 309, 351 post-80s 14–15, 217, 240, 283, 374
 post-90s 217, 374
 post-industrial economy 97 poverty 182, 192, 249, 261, 277, 279, 286–89, 291–92, 375 power of final adjudication 24, 69, 71, 75 preferential treatment 358, 365 pressure group 159, 186 principle of continuity 358 prime minister 27–28 principal officials 7, 24, 28, 30, 32–33, 40, 89, 98–99, 121–24, 126, 329–30, 335; see also Accountability System for Principal Officials (ASPO) private member's bill 8, 51–52, 54–56, 59–60, 72; see also Legislative Council (LegCo) pro-Beijing businessmen, 337; elites, 4, 335, 337, 339, 342; figures, 206–7, 209, 211, 329, 333; groups, 4, 9, 13, 200, 202, 333; political parties, 48, 139; youth groups, 338 pro-China camp 134, 145–46, 153, 165, 168, 171, 173, 235 pro-democracy camp 4, 9, 16, 48–49, 116–18, 134, 141, 144, 149–51,

- 160–66, 169, 173, 232, 238, 240, 325, 327, 331, 333
- pro-establishment 9, 12, 16, 119, 144, 150, 209, 211, 217,
- pro-government 35, 37, 48–49, 54, 57, 63, 116–17, 126, 162–63, 166, 168, 172, 240, 329, 333
- pro-Taipei 202
- productivist welfare capitalism 278
- professional group, professional organization, professional association 15, 147, 186, 194
- Progressive Hong Kong Society 160
- Propaganda Department (in Mainland) 230
- property bubble 264
- property developer 254, 259, 260, 264
- property market 249, 263, 284, 300, 308, 376
- property right
  - intellectual property right, 360, 363; private property right, 256
- property sector 300
- proportional representation system, electoral system 37, 134, 169, 174–75
- pro-Taiwan 161
- protest culture 209
- provincialization 324, 366–67, 376
- Provisional Legislative Council (PLC) 3, 12, 46–49, 63, 67, 72–74, 172
- Provisional Minimum Wage Commission 290–91
- pseudo referendum 207, 211
- public budgeting 253, 260
- public consultation 34, 119, 207, 285, 311, 316, 331–32
- public corporation 101, 122–23, 302
- public discourse 202, 226, 233–35, 353, 374
- public expenditure 9, 50–53, 60, 102–3, 248, 251, 253, 256–60, 269, 271, 280, 313
- public expenditure incidence 260
- Public Finance Ordinance 34
- public good 255–56, 270, 299
- public housing 57, 101, 215, 254, 259–61, 264, 269, 278, 281, 292, 299–301, 305, 308, 311–12, 315–16
- public interest 18, 25, 50, 53, 91–92, 95, 101, 103, 121, 225, 233, 264, 299, 314
- public management reform 87; see also public sector reform and civil service reform
- public opinion 7, 43, 80, 147, 149, 155, 156–58, 159, 163–73, 176
- public opinion poll 3, 224
- Public Order Ordinance 12
- public participation 10, 121–22, 193, 311, 315, 318, 374; see also citizen participation
- public policymaking 181, 225, 318
- public sector reform 25, 100–3, 372
- Public Security Bureau, Mainland 74
- Public Service Commission (PSC) 94
- Putonghua 14

- Queen's Pier 181, 208
- Queer Sisters 213

- radio talk shows 4, 15, 211–12, 233
- Radio Television Hong Kong (RTHK) 228
  - Board of Advisors, 13; Charter, 13; its credibility ratings, 235; editorial independence, 13; role and status, 235, 243
- rail transport 303
- rank 90–91, 97, 103, 106
- rational urban school 305
- real estate investment trust (REIT) 215
- real-estate sector 266, 282–83, 300–2, 309, 312
- reciprocal power 6
- referendum, see de-facto referendum and pseudo referendum
- refugee mentality 200–1, 217
- refugee society 199
- regional coordination 340
- Regional Council (RC) 10, 114, 159, 203, 377
- registration boards 122–23

- regulatory boards 122-123
- re-industrialization 267
- religious group 186
- remuneration package 8
- renationalization 14
- Renminbi (RMB) 329, 340
- rent control 202
- rent review 311-12, 315
- rent seeking 264, 270-71
- rentier 302, 307-8, 318
- resignation 2, 4, 15-16, 33, 118, 138, 143, 149, 209, 287, 333-34
- Revenue Bill 35
- Review of Public Service Broadcasting 13
- revolving door 104
- right of abode 11, 40, 67, 72, 74-79, 165, 215, 238, 328, 378
- riot, 1966 and 1967 1, 200, 202-3
- road map 18, 146, 152, 331, 334
- Royal Instructions 41, 60
- rule of law 2-3, 24-25, 67-69, 73-74, 77-78, 83, 165, 207, 216, 288, 349, 351-2, 355-56, 367, 372, 378
- rural committee 113, 155

- save the harbour movement 310
- Secretary (HKSAR Government)
  - Secretary for Constitutional and Mainland Affairs, 5; Secretary for Financial Services and the Treasury, 34, 308; Secretary for Health, Welfare and Food, 99; Secretary for Home Affairs, 335; Secretary for Housing, Planning and Lands, 54, 282; Secretary for Justice (SJ), 28, 34, 71-73, 80, 152, 335; Deputy Secretary for Labour and Welfare, 13; Secretary for Security, 13, 16
- Selection Committee 8
- self-censorship 13, 229, 230-31, 233, 241, 377; see also mass media
- Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS) 2, 58, 97, 179, 181, 183, 211, 284-85, 292, 326, 339

- Shanghai 297, 306, 351, 357
- signature campaign 181, 187-88, 193, 210, 213, 333
- sinicization 6, 18, 351, 367
- Sino-British Joint Declaration 1, 3, 76, 303, 361
- Sino-British Joint Liaison Group 3
- Sino-British negotiation 3, 18, 159
- Sir Edward Youde Memorial Fund 123
- small-circle election 8, 167
- Small Claims Tribunal 70
- social capital 180, 186, 194
- social harmony 27, 188, 194, 279, 283, 334, 374
- social inequalities 1
- social interest 182
- social justice 299, 312, 315
- social mobilization 193, 238-41; see also cyber-based mobilization and political mobilization
- social movement 193-94, 202, 204, 212-13, 239-40
- social pluralism 238, 242, 374
- social right 278
- social security 286, 292
- social service organization (SSO) 134, 183, 186, 194
- Social Welfare Department 101, 185
- Societies Ordinance 12, 184
- Society for the Protection of the Harbour 216, 310
- socio-economic system 250, 352
- soft authoritarianism 12, 88
- sovereignty 3, 37, 46, 67, 69, 76-77, 80, 89, 114, 118, 143, 281, 288, 309, 312, 330, 349-50, 358, 360, 367, 371
- specialist 61, 92, 96, 106
- Special Administrative Region, Hong Kong (HKSAR) 1, 3, 27, 67, 112, 137, 159, 179, 254, 277, 324, 325
- split-voting system 139, 149
- stakeholder 121, 127, 314, 316
- Standing Committee of the National People's Congress (SCNPC) 4, 11-12, 25, 49, 69, 84, 165, 328

- Star Ferry clock tower, 15, Company, 200;
 pier, 181, 208
- State Council Hong Kong and Macao
 Affairs Office 326
- state-councillor 338; see also China
- statesmen 92
- state-society relations 200
- statutory body (bodies) 17, 24–25, 70,
 111–12, 121–28, 234, 336–37, 371,
 373; see also non-statutory bodies
- statutory minimum wage (SMW)
 289–90; see also minimum wage
- strategic planning 31, 299
- subsidiary legislation 52
- subsidization 102, 261
- Suen, Michael 282
- Sunny Development Limited 314
- Support for Self-Reliance Scheme 15
- sustainable development (SD) 283, 298, 316–17
- Swire Properties Limited 314
- Synergy Net 7, 151
- Sze, Chi-ching 337
- Sze, Jaime 337
- Szeto, Wah 13, 160
- tabloidization 229
- Ta Kung Pao* 335
- Taiwan 5, 6, 139, 161, 200, 265, 268, 278, 305, 328, 360
- Taiwan independence, 227
- Taiwan Nationalist regime 200
- Tang, Henry 14, 29, 139
- Tang, Roy 13
- tariff 5, 272
 non-tariff, 5; tariff-free, 326
- tax 105, 165, 188–89, 243, 248–49, 253–54, 259–61, 269, 271, 291, 375 land tax, 259; profits tax, 258, 259; salaries tax, 258; sales tax, 57, 251
- tax incidence 259, 269, 271
- taxation 50, 51
 coercive taxation, 255, 270; double taxation, 364; global taxation, 259;
 low level of taxation, 277
- Teacup in a Storm* 211
- Telecommunications Ordinance 12,
 58, 212
- Television Broadcasts Limited (TVB)
 244
- Tenants Purchase Scheme (TPS) 282
- tenure 93–94, 103, 362
- tertiary service sector 265
- Tertiary Students 2012 150
- The Hong Kong Advantage (Report)
 309
- think tank 8, 214, 251, 297
- third sector 29, 147, 154, 180, 195
- Tiananmen incident 12, 168, 207, 209;
see also June Fourth incident
- Tien, James Pei-chun 7, 138, 161, 164, 173
- To, Andrew 141
- tong lau* 283
- Tong, Ronny 140
- tourism 47, 263, 265, 267, 340, 344, 351–52, 355, 363
- Town Planning Board 213, 216, 316, 337
- Town Planning Regulations 316
- Trade Development Council (TDC)
 122, 336
- trade unions 40, 202, 329, 195
- trading fund 101
- transparency 123–26, 182–83, 193, 259, 339, 367
- Transparency International 94
- transport policy 304, 318
- Transport Department 313, 318
- Treasury Branch 34
- Tsang, Donald Yam-kuen 2–8, 11, 29,
 31, 33, 39, 87, 98, 104–5, 144,
 151, 237, 254, 262, 279, 288, 290,
 325–27, 344, 362–63
- Tsang, Jasper Yok-shing 161, 335
- Tsang, John 366
- Tsang, Kin-shing 12, 175, 212
- Tsang, Tak-sing 335
- Tung, Chee-hwa 1–2, 7, 11, 14, 16, 29, 31, 33, 39, 48, 89, 98, 104, 123, 138,
 206, 209, 225, 237, 239, 262, 264,
 279, 282, 287, 308–9m 325–26,

- 329–30, 335, 337, 342, 350, 357, 363
 Twitter 15, 214
 two-direction platform 356
- undersecretary 8, 32, 37, 40, 89, 98–99 unemployment 289, 300, 308 unemployment benefit 277 unemployment rate 1–2, 261, 287, 300
 United Democrats of Hong Kong (UDHK) 160–61 united front 238, 324, 327, 329, 334–36, 338
 United Front Work Department of the CCP 334, 338
 United Kingdom (UK) 28, 61, 186, 257, 360, 364
 United Kingdom (UK), Cabinet Office 25
 United Kingdom (UK), Parliament 6, 61
 United Kingdom (UK), Prime Minister's Office 28
 United Nations (UN) 261
 United States (US) 6, 61–62, 79, 137, 228, 254, 257, 263, 265, 268, 270, 349, 358
 Department of State, 6; National Committee on Urban Policy, 298 universal suffrage 4, 16, 105, 111, 118, 128–29, 134, 137–38, 140–41, 144–46, 149–50, 152–54, 165, 173, 203, 210, 325, 330–32, 334, 373
 University Councils in Hong Kong 123
 Urban Council (UC) 113–14, 159, 201–2, 377 urban development 298, 307, 310, 314 urban political economy 18, 249, 306–7, 316, 318, 376 urban policy 18, 248, 249, 297–307 urban policy cases 310 urban politics school 305
 Urban Renewal Authority 283
 urbanization 297, 304
 US Federal Reserve Bank 254 utilitarian familism 201
- veto 56
 the legislative, 37, 49; pan-democrats, 149; powers of the Chief Executive, 7, 30; vetoing, 162
 Victoria Harbour 181, 310 save-the-harbour movement, 310; reclamation, 216, 310, 316 Vocational Training Council 337 voluntary association 179–80 voluntary retirement scheme 101, 103 vote division strategy 170 voting corporate voting, 147, 171, 174, 334; equality of voting right, 167; separate voting mechanism, 8, 9; split-voting system, 139, 149; strategic voting, 170, 173; voting-by-group rule, 162; voting method, 155; voting rates, 201, 203, 209; voting rights, 4; voting system in the Legislative Council (LegCo), 47, 234 visa-free status 362–63
- Wage Protection Movement (WPM) 290
 Wang Dan 13
 Water Supplies Department 102
 Weber, Max 96, 106; see also bureaucracy welfare state 102, 277–78 anti-welfare state, 98; anti-welfarist tradition, 377
 Wen, Jiabao 263, 290, 327, 343
 West Kowloon Cultural Development (WKCD) project 264, 310, 311, 314, 316 single package approach, 314
 West Rail Link 241
 White Paper on District Administration 203
 Women's Commission 336
 Wong, Raymond 16, 163, 211, 141, 150
 World Bank 137, 268
 World City Culture Park Limited 314
 World Development Indicators (of World Bank) 268

- World Trade Organization (WTO) 208, 324, 357, 361, 364–65, 367
- World Wide Alliance for Citizen Participation, see CIVICUS
- WTO Ministerial Meeting 208
- Wuer, Kaixi 13
- Xi, Jinping 82, 327
- Yang, Liwei 337
- Y. Elite Group 336, 338
- Yeoh, Eng-kiong 99
- Yeung, Sum 160
- Yeung, Yiu-chung 339
- Youth Pre-employment Training Program 287
- Youth Work Experience and Training Scheme 287
- Youtube 214, 243
- Zhao, Lianhai 342
- Zeng, Qinghong 326, 334
- zoning 213, 298, 303