Hong Kong Screenscapes
From the New Wave to the Digital Frontier

Edited by Esther M. K. Cheung, Gina Marchetti, and Tan See-Kam
Contents

List of Illustrations vii
Acknowledgements xi
Contributors xiii

Hong Kong Screenscapes: An Introduction 1
Esther M. K. CHEUNG, Gina MARCHETTI, and TAN See-Kam

Part I  Voices of the Hong Kong New Wave 15
1. Do We Hear the City?: Voices of the Stranger in Hong Kong Cinema 17
   Esther M. K. CHEUNG

2. Surfing with the Surreal in Tsui Hark’s Wave: Collage Practice, Diasporic Hybrid Texts, and Flexible Citizenship 33
   TAN See-Kam

3. Ann Hui at the Margin of Mainstream Hong Kong Cinema 51
   Mirana M. SZETO

4. Interview with Ann Hui: On the Edge of the Mainstream 67
   Esther M. K. CHEUNG, Gina MARCHETTI, and TAN See-Kam

5. Urban Nomads, Exilic Reflections: The Cine-Modernism 75 of Patrick Tam
   Esther C. M. YAU

Part II  Independent Connections 93
6. Performing the Margins: Locating Independent Cinema 95
   in Hong Kong
   Nicole KEMPTON
7. Re-imagining Hong Kong–China from the Sidelines: Fruit Chan’s Little Cheung and Durian Durian
   Wendy GAN

8. Alternative Perspectives/Alternative Cinemas: Modern Films and the Hong Kong Experimental Scene
   Roger GARCIA, John WOO, and Jessica HAGEDORN

9. Specters of Memory: An Artist Statement (Displaced)
   Ming-Yuen S. MA

10. Documenting Hong Kong: Interview with Tammy Cheung
    Esther M. K. CHEUNG, Nicole KEMPTON, and Amy LEE

11. Between Times and Spaces: Interview with Evans Chan
    Esther M. K. CHEUNG and Nicole KEMPTON

    Mike INGHAM

Part III  Sex in the Asian City

13. Between Comrade and Queer: Stanley Kwan’s Hold You Tight
    Gina MARCHETTI

14. Interview with Yau Ching: Filming Women in Hong Kong’s Queerscape
    Gina MARCHETTI

15. On Isaac Leung, Cyber Sex as Pseudo-Science: The Artist’s Search for Sex Spaces in Hong Kong (and Beyond)
    Katrien JACOBS

16. The Mistress and Female Sexuality
    Patricia Brett ERENS

17. Reimagining the Femme Fatale: Gender and Nation in Fruit Chan’s
    Hollywood Hong Kong
    Pin-chia FENG

Notes

Index
List of Illustrations

Figure 1.1 Two strangers passing by each other in closely spaced relation. Chungking Express. Dir. Wong Kar-wai, 1994. 22

Figure 1.2 The surrealist superimposition of images of the Hong Kong Victoria Harbor and Mudanjiang in North-eastern China. Durian Durian. Dir. Fruit Chan, 2000. 27

Figure 1.3 Ruan Lingyu dancing as a voiceless body. Her voiceover after her suicide says, “People will say I commit suicide out of guilt.” Center Stage. Dir. Stanley Kwan, 1991. 28

Figure 2.1 Ah Lin, covered in blood, offers the human heart as a love token. We're Going to Eat You. Dir. Tsui Hark, 1980. 33

Figure 2.2 The castrated-hand-as-mutilated-body metaphor (I). Un Chien Andalou. Dir. Salvador Dali and Luis Buñuel, 1928. 37

Figure 2.3 The castrated-hand-as-mutilated-body metaphor (II). We're Going to Eat You. Dir. Tsui Hark, 1980. 38

Figure 3.1 Mother and Daughter at the Barber Shop. Song of the Exile. Dir. Ann Hui, 1990. 59

Figure 3.2 Hair-cutting flashback. Song of the Exile. Dir. Ann Hui, 1990. 59

Figure 3.3 Kwai and Granny: an alternative kinship. The Way We Are. Dir. Ann Hui, 2008. 65

Figure 4.1 Ann Hui. 67
List of Illustrations

Figure 5.1 Patrick Tam directing for “Television New Wave”. 77
Figure 5.2 After This Our Exile. Dir. Patrick Tam, 2006. 81
Figure 5.3 Affluence and image in Miu Kam-fung (1976) dedicated to Jean-Luc Godard. 85
Figure 6.1 He Ain’t Heavy He’s My Brother. Dir. Peter Chan, 1993. 107
Figure 6.2 The Life and Times of Wu Zhongxian. Dir. Evans Chan, 2002. 108
Figure 6.3 Ordinary Heroes. Dir. Ann Hui, 1999. 109
Figure 7.1 Ami shares the screen with Hong Kong legend Brother Cheung. Little Cheung. Dir. Fruit Chan, 1999. 114
Figure 7.2 Yan reacts to being considered beyond the pale. Durian Durian. Dir. Fruit Chan, 2000. 121
Figure 7.3 Yan retreats to her operatic past. Durian Durian. Dir. Fruit Chan, 2000. 124
Figure 8.1 Six Films by Comyn Mo. Dir. Comyn Mo, 1984. 131
Figure 8.2 Antonio Mak Hin-yeung. 132
Figure 8.3 Jim Shum. 133
Figure 9.1 Video still from [os] by Ming-Yuen S. Ma (US, 2009) 145
Figure 9.2 Video still from Movements East-West by Ming-Yuen S. Ma (US, 2003) 146
Figure 9.3 Video still from Myth(s) of Creation by Ming-Yuen S. Ma (US, 1997) 148
Figure 11.1 Evans Chan. 165
Figure 12.1 To Liv(e). Dir. Evans Chan, 1991. 182
Figure 12.2 Cageman. Dir. Jacob Cheung, 1992. 189
Figure 12.3 Ordinary Heroes. Dir. Ann Hui, 1999. 190
Figure 14.1 Yau Ching. 213
Figures 15.1–3 The Impossibility of Having Sex with 500 Men in One Month — I’m an Oriental Whore. Isaac Leung, Mixed Media Installation, 2003. 227, 231, 237
Figure 16.1  Many of the fantasies in The Mistress, such as men eating sushi off a nude female body, came from male friends or callers to Kwok’s talk show. But Kwok complicates the image by introducing the possibility of female pleasure. The Mistress. Dir. Crystal Kwok, 1999.

Figure 16.2  The glamor of a flat in the sky soon leads to the reality of loneliness, while visually, the glass barrier that separates female dependence from male power is symbolized by the Hong Kong skyline below. The Mistress. Dir. Crystal Kwok, 1999.

Contributors

Esther M. K. CHEUNG is dedicated to teaching and research on Hong Kong cultural studies, contemporary Chinese fiction and film, as well as visual and urban culture in the context of globalization. She is the author of Fruit Chan's Made in Hong Kong, editor of In Critical Proximity: The Visual Memories of Stanley Kwan (in Chinese) and co-editor of two collections, Xiang-gang Wen-xue@ Wen-hua Yan-jiu [Hong Kong Literature as/and Cultural Studies] and Between Home and World: A Reader in Hong Kong Cinema. Another book on independent cinemas is forthcoming. She is currently chair of the Department of Comparative Literature and director of the Center for the Study of Globalization and Cultures (CSGC) at the University of Hong Kong.

Patricia Brett ERENS teaches film studies at the School of the Art Institute in Chicago. From 1994 to 2000, she was a senior lecturer at the University of Hong Kong. Her publications include Akira Kurosawa: A Guide to References and Resources (1979), Sexual Stratagems: The World of Women and Film (1979), and Issues in Feminist Film Criticism (1990). In addition, she has published articles on Japanese and Hong Kong cinema.

Pin-chia FENG is professor of the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures, National Chiao Tung University (NCTU), Hsinchu, Taiwan. She was dean of Academic Affairs, associate dean of Academic Affairs, chairperson of the Department of Foreign Languages and Literatures at NCTU, and also served two terms as the president of the Comparative Literature Association of ROC (2005–2008). Currently she is the director of the Film Studies Center at NCTU. Feng received her Ph.D. in English from the University of Wisconsin-Madison. She writes on issues of gender, race, and representation in films as well as in Asian American, African American, and Afro-Caribbean literatures. Her publications include The Female Bildungsroman by Toni Morrison and Maxine Hong Kingston (1998) and En-Gendering Chinese Americas: Reading Chinese American Women Writers (2001). She is also the Chinese translator of Toni Morrison’s Love.

Wendy GAN is an associate professor in the Department of English, University of Hong Kong. She is the author of Fruit Chan’s Durian Durian and has published articles on Hong Kong cinema in Span, Scope: An Online Journal of Film Studies and Jump Cut: A Review of Contemporary Media.

Roger GARCIA was born in Hong Kong and educated in England. He was director of the Hong Kong International Film Festival (HKIFF), and has been a guest programmer for, among others, San Francisco, New York Asian American, and Locarno (Switzerland) International Film Festivals. He continues to program films for San Francisco, Torino, and the Far East Film Festival in Udine. He was a member of the jury for the Hawaii International Film Festival 2003, the HKIFF 2004, and the Network for Asian Fantastic Films (NAFF) in the Puchon International Film Festival 2008. He is also an adviser to the Hong Kong–Asia Film Financing Forum (HAF) and a juror for the Asian Film Awards. He has written extensively for international publications including Variety, Film Comment, Far Eastern Economic Review, and also for National Public Radio (USA), Radio Television Hong Kong — to name a few. He has written and edited books on Cantonese cinema, Hollywood directors Frank Tashlin and Joe Dante, as well as Asians in American Cinema (Edizioni Olivares in English / Cahiers du Cinema in French).

Jessica HAGEDORN is author of the novel Dogeaters (1990) and the edited volume Charlie Chan Is Dead: An Anthology of Contemporary Asian American Fiction (1993), among many other poems, novels, essays, and plays. She wrote the script for Fresh Kill, a feature film by Shu Lea Cheang, and several episodes of The Pink Palace, an animated series created for Oxygen TV.

Mike INGHAM has been teaching English studies as a member of the English Department at Lingnan University since 1999. Previously he worked for the Hong Kong Education Department at the Institute of Language in Education and subsequently the Hong Kong Institute of Education. Film and theater, Hong Kong literature in English and drama in education are Mike’s areas of professional expertise. Mike is a founder member of Theatre Action, a Hong Kong–based drama group that specializes in action research on more literary drama texts. He also directs student productions in English at Lingnan University as part of the university’s liberal arts mission. He is currently working on a study of Hong Kong documentary film and has published critical writing on Hong Kong film. His publications include City Voices: An Anthology of Hong Kong Writing in English (2003), City Stage: Hong Kong Playwriting in English (2005), Staging Fictions: The Prose Fiction Stage Adaptation as Social Allegory (2004), Hong Kong: A Cultural and Literary History in the City of the Imagination series (2007), and Johnnie To’s PTU (2009).

Katrien JACOBS is a scholar, curator, and artist in the field of new media and sexuality and works as assistant professor at the City University of Hong Kong. She was born in Belgium and received her Ph.D. degree in comparative literature and media from the University of Maryland, with a thesis on dismemberment myths and rituals in 1960s/1970s body art and performance media. She has organized netporn conferences in recent years with the Institute of Network Cultures. She published Libi_doc: Journeys in the Performance of Sex Art (2005). Her new book Netporn: DIY Web Culture and Sexual Politics (2007) analyzes DIY porn on the Internet.

Nicole KEMPTON graduated from Duke University before undertaking M.Phil. research on independent film and cultural policy at the University of Hong Kong on a Fulbright fellowship in 2003. She is now program director for the Laogai Research Foundation, a human-rights NGO based in Washington, DC. She is editor of Laogai: The Machinery of Repression in China (2009).

Amy LEE is a Ph.D. candidate in the English Department at the University of California, Berkeley. She received her B.A. from Cornell University and her M.Phil. from the University of Hong Kong, where she was also a US Fulbright scholar. Her current research seeks to historicize Chinese forms of globalism, vis-à-vis twentieth-century revolutionary and capitalist projects, and their impact on national, racial, and postcolonial formations in China and its periphery. Other research interests include transpacific literary and cultural studies, Chinese/American modernities, twentieth-century American and Anglophone literatures, and Asian film and television studies. She has published articles on Hong Kong television and has forthcoming articles on diasporic media geographies and global Chinatown, and the work of Hong Kong independent filmmaker Evans Chan.

Ming-Yuen S. MA is an associate professor in media studies at Pitzer College in Claremont, CA, and a Los Angeles–based media artist. His experimental videos and installations have been exhibited internationally. He was recently Gina MARCHETTI teaches in the Department of Comparative Literature at the University of Hong Kong. In 1995, her book, Romance and the “Yellow Peril”: Race, Sex and Discursive Strategies in Hollywood Fiction (1993), won the award for best book in the area of cultural studies from the Association for Asian American Studies. Her recent books include Andrew Lau and Alan Mak’s “Infernal Affairs” — The Trilogy (2007), From Tian’anmen to Times Square: Transnational China and the Chinese Diaspora on Global Screens (2006), Hong Kong Film, Hollywood and the New Global Cinema, co-edited with Tan See-Kam (2007), and Chinese Connections: Critical Perspectives on Film, Identity and Diaspora, co-edited with Peter X. Feng and Tan See-Kam (2009).

Mirana M. SZETO did her Ph.D. at the University of California, Los Angeles, and is research assistant professor in comparative literature at the University of Hong Kong. She is working on a book entitled Cultural Theory and Its Discontents in Colonial Cultural Politics, and another research study on “Decolonizing Neoliberalism: Urban Cultural Politics in Post-1997 Hong Kong.” She also writes on literature, film, critical theory, and cultural policy in the Hong Kong, Taiwan, and China contexts.

TAN See-Kam (Ph.D., University of Melbourne) is associate professor of communication at the University of Macau, Macau SAR. He has publications in Asian Cinema, Journal of Homosexuality, Jumpcut: A Review of Contemporary Media, Screen, Social Semiotics, and The South East Asian Journal of Social Science, etc., as well as in Chinese-language journals such as the Beijing-based Arts Criticism, Contemporary Cinema, and Film Art. Queer Asian Cinema: Shadows in the Shade, Between Home and World: A Reader in Hong Kong Cinema, The Cinema of Small Nations, and Chinese Films in Focus 2 carry his book chapters, including reprints. Tan has co-edited two anthologies, Hong Kong Film, Hollywood and The New Global Cinema and Chinese Connections: Critical Perspectives on Film, Identity and Diaspora, including a special journal issue on “Gender in Asian cinema” for Asian Journal of Communication.

John WOO, with Roger Woo, co-founded Woo Art International, where he is currently an executive producer based in New York City.
Esther C. M. YAU teaches in the Department of Comparative Literature at the University of Hong Kong. She is the editor of At Full Speed: Hong Kong Cinema in a Borderless World (2001). She is co-editor of “Asia/Pacific: A Spectral Surface” — a special issue of Positions: East Asia Cultures Critique, and co-editor of New Chinese Cinemas: Forms, Identities, Politics (1994). Her essays have been published in a number of journals and anthologies including The Oxford History of World Cinema and Film Quarterly Forty Years: A Collection.
Hong Kong Screenscapes: An Introduction

Esther M. K. Cheung, Gina Marchetti, and Tan See-Kam

Studies of the Chinese Sixth Generation, Chinese “independent,” “urban,” and “underground” cinema, Chinese documentaries, and other aspects of alternative film practices in the People’s Republic of China have received considerable critical scrutiny and scholarly attention. A more limited, but lively critical discussion of Taiwan’s New Cinema also exists. However, although there are many books about Hong Kong cinema, no single volume focuses exclusively on independent, alternative, and avant-garde filmmaking in the territory. Hong Kong Screenscapes fills this gap not by examining Hong Kong independent media in isolation, but by situating Hong Kong’s independent spirit within the context of global mediascapes.

In Modernity at Large: Cultural Dimensions of Globalization (1996), Arjun Appadurai talks about the global cultural economy in the terms of an interwoven yet contestory network composed of “ethnoscapes,” “mediascapes,” “technoscapes,” “financescapes,” and “ideoscapes.” He understands these “-scapes” as “deeply perspectival constructs, inflected by the historical, linguistic, and political situatedness of different sorts of actors” that account for the interactions, disjunctions, differences, and ruptures within global cultural flows. Drawing on Benedict Anderson’s notion of “imagined communities,” he calls conjunctions of such flows “imagined worlds,” in which “the image, the imagined, the imaginary” direct the imagination into “an organized field of social practices, a form of work … and a form of negotiation between sites of agency … and globally defined fields of possibility.”

Hong Kong Screenscapes rides with this trajectory. Hong Kong’s wealth of art films, documentaries, experimental productions, digital arts, and videos constitute its screenscapes, offering multifaceted ways to look at the city’s rich screen culture beyond the confines of the local, commercial film industry, making its connections to world film/screen culture clear. Many Hong Kong artists, filmmakers, and media producers, or in short, screen architects, in fact, create works that arise out of the local context to become part of an “imagined world” on global screens. Just as the architects of Hong Kong’s cityscape work independently to create a distinctive built environment in harmony with global architectural concerns, Hong Kong’s media architects construct unique screenscapes which blend with transnational flows, but remain subject to local conditions.

Collectively or otherwise, these works show active engagement with particular concerns of their time — whether they be about the city’s self-governance, the territory’s fraught relations with the People's Republic of China (PRC) or, more generally, Hong Kong’s place in a globalizing world. This has entailed opening up a public space for the exploration of issues involving gender, sexuality, ethnicity, class, migration, and politics, including flexible citizenship, on screen. Ranging from experimental shorts produced by individual artists to feature films made within the commercial industry that actively challenge the established generic and narrative conventions standard at the time of their production, the works break new ground, making manifest independent, alternative voices within or at the margins of the mainstream; they chart experimental urges in non-fiction filmmaking and show a commitment to hybrid forms on the digital frontier.

Global flows of images, people, capital, and ideas intersect within Hong Kong screenscapes, variously highlighting aesthetic innovation and independent production. They solidify into configurations that exploit alternative forms and new technologies. Thus, these screenscapes, cutting a swathe from the celluloid to the digital domains, work within a complex global dynamic that crosses art house and film festival circuits, art galleries and Internet sites in order to develop a dynamic screen culture which local Hong Kong and global concerns traverse. Just as the Hong Kong New Wave made an important intervention in the local film and television industries as well as within international film culture beginning in the late 1970s, Hong Kong screenscapes have exhibited the same inventiveness in experimental cinema (e.g., the film clubs of the 1960s and 1970s exemplified by groups such as Modern Films) and “underground” films (e.g., Category III films by Yau Ching and Crystal Kwok). They also foster connections between documentary and fiction film.

That inventiveness is likewise evident in works that tap deep into new media technologies (e.g., Isaac Leung’s digital art, Ming-Yuen S. Ma’s experimental videos, and DV features by Evans Chan and Vincent Chui). Working outside or on the margins of the commercial mainstream, these screen architects similarly face issues of access and distribution, public acceptance, and censorship. At the same time, their work partakes in the global dynamics of film culture from “indie” cinema to New Queer Cinema. Whether seen on the silver screen or on the computer screen, the work crosses paths with international public screen forums, generating discourses and debates about the environment, democracy, workers’ and minority rights, as well as globalization.

Global connections and screen innovations, in fact, have characterized Hong Kong cinema for decades. Although the contributions of the Hong Kong New Wave to world film aesthetics are well documented, those of Hong Kong’s dynamic, if sometimes marginalized, independent, alternative, underground, and experimental media artists are less so. This book attempts to fill this gap by highlighting the work of Hong Kong filmmakers, videographers, and digital media artists outside or at the edge of the commercial mainstream. These screen architects work around the globe: Hong Kong, Taiwan, the PRC, the United States and elsewhere, including Europe. They operate on the cutting-edge of transnational screen culture, beyond the commercial Hong Kong–Hollywood axis.

Given the history of Hong Kong as a British colony, an important port within a Cold War Asia dominated by the United States, a city on the border with the PRC, geopolitical considerations play an instrumental part in the figurations of any screen spaces that open up to aesthetic experimentation and critical commentary. Hong Kong’s screenscapes also draw attention to issues of personal liberation and social justice. As Hong Kong moves into its second decade as a Special Administrative Region (SAR) of the PRC, it seems appropriate to take a close look at the ways in which a range of provocative screenscapes continue to thrive in Hong Kong. Alongside the Sixth Generation in the PRC, a wealth of alternative film practices has emerged across the Chinese-speaking world in and since the new millennium. Hong Kong inevitably remains part of this vital cross-border cinematic film culture and a key part of the legacy of Chinese film within world cinema.

The “Independence” of Hong Kong’s Screenscapes

In Hong Kong, it is not easy to clearly demarcate “the indies” — whether filmmakers or digital artists — from their mainstream, industrial counterparts. Two types of related politics are always associated with modes of “independent” productions. They are the politics of access and the politics of recognition. The politics of access often entails the assumption that the filmmaker has the right not only to artistic and personal expressions but also to fight for access and participatory equity in a hierarchical and unequal world of resource distribution. The politics of recognition, as Charles Taylor famously explicates, is associated with the ethics of authenticity. Given the poststructuralist questioning of the “authority” of the author, issues of the value of terms such as “authenticity” and “creative freedom” inevitably arise. The circulation of these independent visions may then enable us to rethink and redefine auteurism in the deterritorialized sphere of public life. One of the major questions concerns the impact of the re-enchantment of the notion of the personal in a disenchanted postmodern world. No particular style, format, political affiliation, means of production, distribution, or exhibition links independent media artists together into a single constituency. However, claims of independence do draw individuals together in order to construct imagined communities of their own across geopolitical boundaries. This aspect of Hong Kong’s screenscapes can then be understood as an attempt to construct a critical public sphere within a global media environment. Broad-based public participation in Hong Kong’s body politic, including the issue of “democracy,” has a media equivalent, and many of the territory’s screen architects take their role as conduits for the expression of this popular voice very seriously. As Mike Ingham points out in his chapter on the “essay film,” media artists as “public intellectuals” on a par with essayists who work in print media have a vital role to play in Hong Kong’s screenscapes. They put a public face on independent thought and social critique.

The “independent spirit,” in fact, has animated several key moments in the history of Hong Kong screen culture. The Hong Kong New Wave Cinema of the late 1970s and 1980s as well as the so-called “Second Wave” of the 1990s provide perhaps the best known and most widely studied artistic turns in Hong Kong film culture. However, as the conversations with Roger Garcia, John Woo, and Jessica Hagedorn in this volume show, the emergence of the New Wave was far from “new” within the blossoming culture of Hong Kong’s cine-clubs (such as Phoenix Cine Club and the Film Guard Association) and small-format experimental film communities. Similar to the French New Wave which emerged out of a culture of cinephiles associated with publications such as Cahiers du Cinema, Hong Kong’s New Wave was fueled by the energies of writers associated with publications such as Close Up Film Review (later, Close Up Weekly) and Film Biweekly.

The key filmmakers eventually brought together as the “New Wave” by critics, programmers, and scholars benefited from access to new approaches to filmmaking they learned during their studies in Europe and North America. An opportunity for innovation also came about because of changes in Hong Kong’s television industry (particularly under the leadership of producer Selina Chow Leung Suk-yi). Patrick Tam, Ann Hui, and Tsui Hark (respectively represented in this volume by Esther C. M. Yau’s, Mirana M. Szeto’s, and Tan See-Kam’s chapters) went abroad for their education and came back to Hong Kong to work in television before going on to make feature films. In his work on the Hong Kong New Wave, Law Kar highlights “innovative techniques ... urban sensibilit[ies], interest[s] in new visual styles, and more personal means of expression” as the key characteristics which set these films apart from the mainstream.⁷

The first Hong Kong International Film Festival (HKIFF) in 1977 also invigorated Hong Kong film culture by showcasing more challenging works, and by bringing world art cinema to the local community. As Hong Kong cinema entered the global arena, a newer “Second Wave” of filmmakers emerged. Represented in this anthology by Wong Kar-wai (see Esther M. K. Cheung on “the acousmatic voice”) and Stanley Kwan (in Gina Marchetti’s chapter on Hold You Tight [1998]), these filmmakers came to world screens with a cosmopolitan perspective showcased in films set in cities as diverse as Buenos Aires, New York, Taipei, Beijing, and Shanghai. However, the quotidian and the local never completely vanish from New Wave screens. As Hector Rodriguez notes: “… the New Wave combined a cosmopolitan understanding of film form influenced by world cinema models with a realist commitment to the specificity of the local identity.”⁸ The dialectic between the global and the local extends beyond the New Wave to mold all of Hong Kong’s screenscapes in profound ways, entailing what critics call “the ethics in a world of strangers” (see Cheung’s chapter on strangerhood and cosmopolitanism).

As the studios that dominated Hong Kong cinema from the 1950s to the 1980s (e.g., Shaw Brothers, Golden Harvest) went into decline or broke down and broke up, filmmakers found themselves pushed in the direction of economic, industrial, and institutional independence in unprecedented numbers. A few independent spirits, such as Tang Shu-shuen (best known for her internationally acclaimed The Arch [1970]),⁹ predated or overlapped with the New Wave. However, some of the “indie” films to emerge in the 1980s and 1990s demonstrate less of an independent artistic “spirit” than the studio-backed productions of the early New Wave. Still, the convergence of economic and artistic independence did make an undeniable mark on Hong Kong screenscapes. The efforts of the HKIFF, Hong Kong Independent Short Film and Video Awards (IFVA), the Hong Kong Lesbian and Gay Film Festival, the Hong Kong Asian Independent Film Festival (HKAIFF), and the Hong Kong Asian Film Festival (HKAFF) show a continuing commitment to programming work outside the commercial mainstream; they also grant venues for showcasing the best of Hong Kong independent productions locally. In more ways than one, Hong Kong SAR now has a steady — albeit limited — stream of funds for independent production through the Hong Kong Arts Development Council (ADC) and elsewhere.¹⁰
It is certainly no coincidence that these developments in independent film production coincide with Hong Kong’s change of sovereignty. The impact of the 1997 Handover takes on particular importance, since historically critical times often inspire and motivate artists and cultural practitioners to reflect upon their own history and to grapple or come to terms with their current situations and future predicaments. Film art is, after all, a process of making sense of the world by self-conscious and self-motivated artistic endeavors. These complicated circumstances have produced at least three patterns of independent filmmaking which have been played out through the politics of access and the politics of recognition. These patterns distinguish Hong Kong independent films from the strict normative demarcation of studio production as commercial and independent art as oppositional and alternative.

The establishment of the ADC encouraged a number of first-timers to make films. Although investors and producers do not always intervene in the creative process, the experiences of filmmakers such as Vincent Chui, Carol Lai Miu-suet, and Yan-yan Mak, who made their debut during this period, show that financial independence in some way grants access to the spirit of independence, if not, total autonomy. Their first features document important moments in the history of Hong Kong independent cinema. But their subsequent works, for example Chui’s Love Is Elsewhere (2008), can indicate that independence has its limits, and the demands of the marketplace may lead filmmakers in unexpected directions. Moving in a different course, Tammy Cheung (see interview with the filmmaker included in this book) has churned out a productive corpus of significant documentary films in the direct cinema style without industrial sponsorship, sometimes with ADC funding, sometimes with resources she raises herself. Her documentaries record many facets of Hong Kong social and cultural life, with subject matter ranging from education to post-1997 politics.

This period also features Fruit Chan’s explosive independent debut, Made in Hong Kong (1997), and his subsequent films that were made at the margin of the mainstream. Because of the importance of Chan’s oeuvre to the development of contemporary Hong Kong independent screenscapes, several chapters (by Esther M. K. Cheung, Wendy Gan, and Pin-Chia Feng) in this volume deal with his films. Since Chan first started as an assistant director in the industry, his cross-over from the mainstream to the independent realm illustrates a reverse pattern, which he has described as a change of alignment to launch a cinematic revolution. As an attempt at defining the meaning of Hong Kong’s identity and cultural space during transitional times, Chan’s specific independent vision displays an internal drive characterized by authorial expressivity and a highly personal voice. In a similar way, Evans Chan also talks about the need to have the burning desire and strong conviction to pursue independent filmmaking (see the interview with Evans Chan in this anthology). Fruit Chan’s reverse pattern expresses a similar in-between vision shared by other industrial filmmakers such as Ann Hui (see Szeto’s chapter), Stanley Kwan (see Cheung’s and Marchetti’s chapters), Tsui Hark (see Tan’s chapter), and Herman Yau Lai-to (see Ingham’s chapter). Herman Yau describes this in-between role as an art of making-do, borrowing from Michel de Certeau.12

Hui and Kwan are especially notable for their parallel contributions in these two spheres. They have made not only independent films that contain their own personal vision, but also worked for well-known commercial film companies. Their memoir films, Hui’s As Time Goes By (1997; co-directed with Vincent Chui) and Kwan’s Still Love You After All These (1997), were made in collaboration with Peggy Chiao’s production groups in Taiwan that include the Chinese Television Company, Arc Light Films, and Rice Film International. Comparable to these two memoir films, Fruit Chan’s Little Cheung (1999) includes autobiographical references to the experience of growing up in Hong Kong. If the mainstream cultural representations of Hong Kong’s success story are always celebrations of the privileged, the portrayal of the stories of ordinary people and their quotidian spaces offers us an alternative, if not oppositional, perspective to understanding Hong Kong’s neglected history. In the matter of the “personal,” the “ordinary,” and the “neglected” (in the sense of the underprivileged), Hui’s, Kwan’s, and Chan’s works recall, in uncanny ways, the left-wing concerns of postwar Hong Kong cinema typically associated with the not-so-major studios of that time, such as Feng Huang and Great Wall (as opposed to Shaw Brothers), or in relatively more contemporaneous time, those found in canonical films of the Hong Kong New Wave period such as Allen Fong’s independent production, Father and Son (1981).

As just mentioned, Hong Kong independents do not confine themselves only to the local. Many of them have built up a close working relation with Chinese-language film groups in Taiwan and the PRC. Nelson Yu Lik-wai set up Hu Tong Production and has worked intimately with Jia Zhangke (of the PRC). Hui and Kwan’s long-term relationship with Taiwanese filmmakers, such as Wu Nien-jen, has enabled them to make personal films. Fruit Chan has been supported by film funds in Korea and Japan. Vincent Chui’s debut, Leaving in Sorrow (2002), was partly inspired by the Danish Dogma film movement: this low-budget production features “Dogma” characteristics and entertains the politics of access.13 Without the glamour of technology-intensive production, Chui’s films gained recognition in many international film festivals. Chui is also one of the founding members of Ying E Chi, a non-profit film collective, helping new and independent filmmakers to distribute their work. Hong Kong filmmakers such as New York–based Evans Chan have benefited from the efforts of this collective.
Mainstream film producers Eric Tsang, Andrew Lau Wai-keung, and Andy Lau have also supported young, independent Asian filmmakers. The last, also a Hong Kong film superstar, has thrown his weight behind new and experimental directors, helping them produce and distribute their debut features. His Focus: First Cuts project (2006), via Film Focus, has resulted in six film projects by new film talents from Hong Kong, Taiwan, the PRC, Malaysia, and Singapore. Hong Kong filmmaker and critic Shu Kei has helped Zhang Yuan, Wang Xiaoshuai, and others to distribute and exhibit their films in overseas film festivals. These cross-border interactions among Hong Kong, mainland China, Taiwan, and other parts of the Chinese-speaking world have charted new directions that define the ways in which we understand the nature of independent filmmaking in the global context. (For more on these institutional and cross-border indie connections, see Nicole Kempton’s chapter in this volume.)

All the screen architects represented in this volume lay a claim to a voice within the global public sphere from a particularly Hong Kong point of view. Some base that claim on a democratic right to political participation, others agitate for aesthetic diversity, and still others demand the full participation of ethnic, sexual, or other minorities within Hong Kong’s civic environment. In the international film scene, Hong Kong cinema presents itself as a multifaceted terrain that allows for many different aesthetic options to appear. However, the question of “authenticity” remains, and the issue of an individual screen artist’s right to claim a space within Hong Kong screenscapes poses a potentially vexing problem. As Hong Kong filmmakers move from the local to the global or drift outside the local production contexts to make films in the PRC, Taiwan, and elsewhere in the Chinese diaspora, the question shifts from how “independent” a filmmaker is to how closely an artist can be identified with a specific “Hong Kong” identity. It then gives rise to contested ways of articulating cultural experiences in relation to Hong Kong in a global context. Similarly, filmmakers raised in the United States (e.g., Crystal Kwok, who was born in San Francisco) rub shoulders with Hong Kong independents like Fruit Chan, who was born in Guangdong. While many of these screen architects may be “made in Hong Kong,” as the title of Chan’s first film defines the children of immigrants who now make up the preponderance of the metropolis, Hong Kong voices come from all corners of the globe and spread from Hong Kong to cover the world.

These more fluid identities demand a different sort of what Charles Taylor has termed “politics of recognition.” More diverse, hybrid positions mark these filmmakers and their demands for a place for Hong Kong within global screen culture. Undoubtedly, not all independent filmmakers position themselves as fighters in the politics of recognition. However, there seems to be a strong motivation to carve out a zone where personal vision is shared. Such discursive practices can translate into actual action and deeds, even though some of these media practitioners would seek financial support from the industry. As scholarship on Chinese-language cinemas has focused primarily on aesthetics and histories of production, this specific attention to the moral sources of independent filmmaking provides us with a new and worthwhile area of research to chart.

Sexual Challenges

Drawing on a common concern for “authentic” sexual expression as well as the political and moral implications of the public presentation of sexualities, Hong Kong screen artists have made major interventions in the public discourse involving gender and sexual orientation. For decades, Hong Kong women filmmakers have been on the cutting edge of exploring the challenges faced by women in contemporary Asian society. Although seldom defining their work as “feminist,” filmmakers such as Ann Hui, Mabel Cheung, Clara Law, Tang Shushuen, among many others, have used their access to the screen to look critically at patriarchal institutions and the ways in which women have responded to male domination. They have taken up timely topics and accordingly explored related subject matter that ranges from migrant sex workers to teenage sexualities. Other women filmmakers, including Yau Ching (see the interview included here) and Crystal Kwok (see chapter by Patricia Brett Erens), have had their own battles with the censors and the use/misuse of Hong Kong’s “Category III” designation for “adult only” fare.

However, the impact that Ang Lee’s award-winning film, The Wedding Banquet (1993), had on the Chinese-speaking world cannot be ignored. This film generated a cycle of films about the gay Chinese man (less often, the Chinese lesbian, bisexual, transvestite, or transsexual) in transnational China and the Chinese diaspora. Chris Berry, for example, has noted that the young gay Chinese man, in particular, has become a symbol of not only questions of a changing Chinese identity but also, as these images circulate globally, of a broader postmodern identity crisis going beyond the Chinese-speaking world. 14 With the rise of the New Queer Cinema worldwide, Hong Kong filmmakers as diverse as Yon Fan and Wong Kar-wai began to consider stories revolving around queer concerns.

Lesbians, transvestites, gay men, and other shades of queer had been on Hong Kong silver screens in the past. They have variously appeared in warrior-errant films (wuxia pian) such as Chor Yuen’s Intimate Confessions of a Chinese Courtesan (1972), Eddie Fong Ling-ching’s An Amorous Woman of the Tang Dynasty (1984), and Tsui Hark’s Swordsmen II and III (1992–93), graced the contemporary drama film genre such as Chang Tseng-chai’s Sex for Sale (1974) and Wong Yuk-shan’s The Twin Bracelets (1990), and occasioned “sexploitative” flicks such as Kuei Chih-hung’s The Bamboo House of Dolls (1973). Qiqing movies such as Li Han-hsiung’s The Love Eterne (1963), Chen Yu-hsin and Ho Meng-hua’s A Maid from Heaven (1964), and Yueh Feng’s Madame White Snake (1962) and The Lotus Lamp (1965) likewise have their fair share of gender-bending themes. Typically adapted from traditional folklores about strange and supernatural love that occurs at and across the human realms, this sub-genre of romance films is most notable for featuring and celebrating female-to-male cross-sex acting. They accordingly yield “almost heterosexual” love stories that put a queer spin on heteronormativity.

The New Queer Cinema on the Hong Kong screenscape has swung open the doors to representations of sexuality more firmly, and also in more explicit and extensive ways. Wong Kar-wai’s Happy Together (1997), Shu Kei’s A Queer Story (1997), Yon Fan’s Bishonen (1998), and Stanley Kwan’s Hold You Tight (see Marchetti’s chapter in this volume) all brought Hong Kong gay men out of their screen closets at around the same time, with other indies such as Yau Ching’s Ho Yuk: Let’s Love Hong Kong (2002) (see the interview with Yau Ching included here) and Yan-yan Mak’s Butterfly (2004) granting visibility to Hong Kong lesbians. Increasingly, gays and lesbians, whether real-life or reel-life, have “come out” on the Hong Kong screenscapes, as if following the footsteps of celebrities such as Stanley Kwan and the late Leslie Cheung who bravely smashed their closet at the height of their respective careers (see Cheung on Kwan’s Lan Yu [2001] and Still Love You After All These).

The decriminalization of sodomy in Hong Kong (1991) is comparatively recent, and the relationship between LGBT (lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender) rights and questions of sovereignty and the “rule of law” have been salient before and now after 1997. The use of the term “tongzhi” to refer to and talk about gays (a.k.a. g-ren) and lesbians (a.k.a. la-la), for example, highlights some of these controversies. After Mao’s death and the end of the Cultural Revolution in 1976, the use of the word “comrade” (“tongzhi”) as a form of address indicating revolutionary intimacy within the class struggle began to fall out of favor. First taken up by gay communities in Hong Kong and Taiwan in the 1990s, and then in the PRC (and elsewhere), “tongzhi” began to be used for hailing fellow homosexuals. The term, which also means people with a common will who harbor common aspirations, ambitions, and ideals, underscores their affinity with a common struggle for tolerance, acceptance, and recognition within and beyond the heteronormative mainstream. It is a platform for giving a public voice to tongzhi, a nomination that seeks to make visible an otherwise invisible people whose life-styles had heretofore been variously ignored, denied, condemned as “bourgeois,” and vilified as “Western” decadence.

Although homosexuality was never “officially” criminalized within the People’s Republic, the appropriation of “tongzhi” does not indicate any link between the class struggle and the fight for tongzhi rights within the Chinese-speaking world. Rather, it has the same ironic edge “queer” does in English. In that case, the derogatory “queer” (i.e., “odd,” “curious”) metamorphoses into a sign of pride within a hostile, straight world. It is thus not fortuitous that the Chinese term for “queer” is “ku-er”. A phonetic borrowing no less, the particular neologism literally translates into “cool (‘ku’) kid (‘er’)”, or the child of cool, and with that, both contributes to and partakes in challenging the social stigma otherwise associated with LGBT life-choices. Similarly, “tongzhi,” stripped of its revolutionary connotations involving class struggle, becomes a sign of pride in an often violent heterosexist environment. It alludes not to the Great Proletariat Cultural Revolution but the sexual revolution, which also runs with the politics of access and the politics of recognition. The tongzhi-scapes, whether rendered visible through films or via digital means, or in cyberspace (see Jacobs’s interview with Isaac Leung), thus have stories that are simultaneously private and public: the private story of a ku-er’s search for access and recognition, or for affection, romance, love, and sex, is also a social and public story of tongzhi-dom, and vice versa.

However, “tongzhi” has another layer of irony attached to it, since its current usage emerges in the wake of Hong Kong’s change in sovereignty and the heated debates surrounding Taiwan’s status vis-à-vis the People’s Republic. Gays and lesbians in Hong Kong and Taiwan may strengthen bonds of solidarity with their “comrades” in the Mainland under siege from a similarly hostile or insensitive straight-defined society or they may be distancing themselves through irony from the Communist government that has tried to make them “comrades” through reunification with the motherland. The politics of sexual desire has a double edge within the Chinese world and the meaning of “tongzhi” goes beyond nationalism, party politics, class relations, and sexual orientation to stand in for a constellation of issues that cannot be easily summed up as exclusively “queer.”

As filmmakers such as Yau Ching, video artists such as Ming-Yuen S. Ma, and digital pioneers such as Isaac Leung bring Hong Kong’s tongzhi community into the contemporary global arena, Hong Kong’s pivotal place as a public platform for the consideration of Chinese identity, sexual orientation, and gender roles in the digital age becomes abundantly clear. Hong Kong screenscapes provide that important point of access to the world stage by cultivating transnational connections, multilingual encounters, and a spirit of screen independence. Unfortunately, this independent vision is too often overshadowed by Hong Kong cinema’s commercial success in the international film marketplace. This anthology hopes to redress that imbalance by providing an alternative perspective on Hong Kong media culture and its place on global screens.

The Structure of the Book

Drawn from the ranks of established and emerging scholars in the field as well as filmmakers, critics, and independent researchers, this anthology presents critical appraisals of Hong Kong screenscapes and new research on Hong Kong’s place within global screen culture. While remaining in conversation with previously published scholarship, this volume offers appraisals of directors working within and at the edge of the mainstream (e.g., Ann Hui, Fruit Chan, Herman Yau, Stanley Kwan) and underappreciated filmmakers (e.g., Evans Chan, Crystal Kwok, Yau Ching, Roger Garcia), as well as new perspectives on Hong Kong independent cinema’s place within global film culture and its complex interconnections with Fifth and Sixth Generation filmmakers (PRC), American avant-garde cinema, and the rise of independent production globally over the last decade.

In Part I, “Voices of the Hong Kong New Wave” charts the beginnings of an independent spirit within Hong Kong New Wave feature film production starting in the 1970s. Using a cinematic trope that connects the New Wave with the new independents, Esther M. K. Cheung looks at the importance of the acousmatic voice in Hong Kong cinema. As issues of nostalgia, longing, death, decay, and metamorphosis take on an added allegorical significance as Hong Kong passes from a British Crown colony to a Special Administrative Region of the PRC, voices from the past that refuse to remain silent and dead in the present haunt the city of Hong Kong and liberate the ethical generosity within the context of cosmopolitanism. Cheung looks at key films by Stanley Kwan, Wong Kar-wai, and Fruit Chan in order to chart the way these acousmatic voices become infused within the cinematic cityscape of Hong Kong. Chapters by Esther C. M. Yau, Mirana M. Szeto, and Tan See-Kam follow up with detailed examinations of Patrick Tam, Ann Hui, and Tsui Hark respectively, tracking the New Wave’s indebtedness to both realist and surrealist cinematic legacies. Tam, Hui, and Tsui have staying power in the Hong Kong film industry, and they all began their careers at its margin. Szeto looks at the importance of social realism within Hui’s corpus, while Tan zooms in on Tsui’s early films, seeking to place them in relation to the debates about Third World filmmaking and T/third cinema as well as the “accented cinema” of Hamid Naficy’s characterization of diasporic, exilic, and immigrant cinemas.\textsuperscript{18} Yau’s analysis of Tam’s career and interview with the director show the ways in which Hong Kong New Wave filmmakers continue to cultivate their global connections from Japanese popular culture and European art cinema to the everyday life of the diasporic Chinese community in Malaysia.

Part II, “Independent Connections,” plots the recent rise of Hong Kong independents. Filmmakers like Fruit Chan have considerably expanded the aesthetic idiom, anticipated audience, and accepted production practices of Hong Kong cinema. Nicole Kempton looks at the complex ways in which independent filmmakers deal with the challenges of funding, government regulations, distribution, exhibition, and critical reception of their films. Wendy Gan’s chapter provides a detailed study of how cross-border Hong Kong/PRC issues become part of Fruit Chan’s independent vision.

Moving from independent feature filmmaking to Hong Kong’s avant-garde film scene, Roger Garcia of Modern Films, John Woo of Woo Art, and novelist Jessica Hagedorn engage in a transnational dialogue about the difficulties of establishing and maintaining avant-garde/experimental film culture in the United States and Hong Kong. With Woo based in New York City and Garcia moving between Hong Kong, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, both filmmakers/producers provide a fascinating account of the history of avant-garde film production in Asian and Asian American communities.

This part also includes interviews with filmmakers Tammy Cheung and Evans Chan as well as an artist statement on transnational film culture by Ming-Yuen S. Ma. All three filmmakers situate themselves between North America and Hong Kong, drawing inspiration from their ties to both continents, with a keen eye to the political and social struggles faced by the people of Hong Kong. Mike Ingham on the “essay film” draws attention to the importance of that form to Hong Kong’s screen culture, particularly in its ability to raise issues of political access and accountability typically absent in commercial cinema.

Part III, “Sex in the Asian City,” looks closely at the ways in which Hong Kong New Wave and independent filmmakers, including digital artists, have approached queer issues within a transnational framework. These filmmakers have been particularly bold in their exploration of changing attitudes toward gender and sexual variance in Hong Kong society. Gina Marchetti’s essay on Stanley Kwan’s \textit{Hold You Tight} here explores the connection between politics and sexuality in relation to Hong Kong’s change in sovereignty in 1997. Her interview with independent filmmaker Yau Ching, best known for her \textit{Ho Yuk: Let’s Love Hong Kong}, throws light on the lives of young lesbians and the challenges encountered by filmmakers who attempt a frank treatment of lesbianism within Hong Kong’s screenscapes.
Looking at sexuality from another perspective, Patricia Brett Erens examines The Mistress (1999), a narrative by border-crossing independent filmmaker Crystal Kwok. Kwok, an Asian American educated in the United States and Hong Kong, explores female sexuality in her film about the life of a Chinese American woman who becomes an English tutor to a Hong Kong businessman’s Mainland mistress and, despite herself, transforms into that wealthy man’s new conquest. The ways in which women’s roles and sexual possibilities continue to be defined by terms like “mistress” — or “xiao tai tai” or “siu lo po” (“little wife” in Chinese) — testify to the continuing restraints placed on women’s lives and sexual expression by male-defined notions of what “femininity” means in traditional Chinese society. Women from America, Hong Kong, and the PRC remain sisters in misery as they share their frustrated desires and chafe at the social restraints of patriarchal norms.

Isaac Leung’s work is part of this transnational conversation on the relationship between queer identity and digital culture. Katrien Jacobs provides a context for Leung’s work within a growing body of avant-garde cyber-art devoted to the exploration of queer sexuality. Isaac Leung comes from and continues to work in Hong Kong, although he was educated, for a time, in the United States (in Chicago). He reinforces critical global links among the Hong Kong arts community, the international avant-garde, and transnational queer culture that make his work particularly important to furthering the visibility and understanding of the queer Asian experience worldwide. In the concluding chapter, Pin-Chia Feng explores Fruit Chan’s oeuvre and highlights the ways in which gender permutability dramatizes the overlapping realms of the economic, the political, and the sexual. The movement of the mercurial “Shanghai Angel” through Hong Kong and on to America in Hollywood, Hong Kong provides a fitting end to Feng’s essay as well as this volume on Hong Kong independent cinema’s own changing relationship to China, America, and the world at large.

These essays collectively seek to throw light on the often hidden dimensions of Hong Kong screenscapes from the 1960s to the present, from the celluloid to the digital frontiers, and from private lives to public expressions. This book, then, provides a platform for further discussion of Hong Kong independent, alternative, and experimental screen culture, by offering an invitation to consider Hong Kong screen architects’ efforts and visions at the margins of the commercial mainstream.
Notes

Introduction

5. For more on this history, see Law Kar, “An Overview of Hong Kong’s New Wave Cinema,” in Yau, At Full Speed, 31–52.
6. Ibid., 47.
7. See also Ackbar Abbas, Hong Kong: Culture and the Politics of Disappearance (Hong Kong: Hong Kong University Press, 1997) for the discussion on the filmmakers’ “critical proximity,” 33.
9. For more on Tang’s oeuvre, see Yau Ching, Filming Margins: Tang Shu Shuen, A Forgotten Hong Kong Woman Film Director (Hong Kong: Hong Kong University Press, 2004).
10. See Connie Lam, “Hong Kong Independent Scene in the 90s,” in The Age of Independents: New Asian Film and Video (Hong Kong: Leisure and Cultural Services Department and Hong Kong Arts Centre, 2000), 3–4; May Fung, “i-GENERATIONS: A Tentative Study” (in Chinese) in Hong Kong Film Archive, i-GENERATIONS: Independent, Experimental and Alternative Creations from the 60s to Now (Hong Kong: Leisure and Cultural Services Department, 2001), 4–7.

Chapter 1

1. Some small portions of writing in this essay have appeared in Chapter 6 of Fruit Chan’s Made in Hong Kong (Hong Kong: Hong Kong University Press, 2009), but the material has been significantly reorganized and new perspectives as well as analyses have also been added. The analysis on Wong Kar-wai and Stanley Kwan’s films has not been published before.

6. Simmel, “The Metropolis and Mental Life.”

9. Ibid.

12. Ibid., 4, 21.

13. Ibid., 24.

22. Ibid.

23. Ibid., Chapter 5.

25. Article 22(4) of the Basic Law of Hong Kong stipulates that people “from other part of China” must apply for approval for entry into Hong Kong, and that the number of people who enter for settlement is decided by the Central People’s government, after consultation with the Hong Kong government.

31. Cui Shuqin, “Stanley Kwan’s Center Stage: The (Im)possible Engagement between Feminism and Postmodernity,” in Between Home and World, 484–508.

Chapter 2

1. An earlier version of this chapter, titled “‘I Grew Up in a Colonial Environment’: A Study of Tsui Hark’s Early Films,” was presented at the Whither the Orient: Asians in Asian and Non-Asian Cinema Conference, organized by Asian Culture Forum and held in Gwangju, Korea, October 26–29, 2006. It won the runner-up prize for best faculty paper.

6. Ibid., 50–1.
7. Tsui Hark, “Tsui Hark on Tsui Hark: Three Hong Kong Film Archive Interviews,” in The Swordsman and His Jiang Hu: Tsui Hark and Hong Kong Film, ed. Sam Ho and Ho Wai-leng, trans. Margaret Lee, interview by Cheung Chi-sing and Cheuk Pak-tong (November 11, 1998) (Hong Kong: Hong Kong Film Archive, 2002), 175.
8. Ibid., 176.
9. Ibid.
14. French Indochina was part of the French colonial empire. Established in 1887, it composed of a federation of the three Vietnamese regions, Tonkin (North), Annam (Central), and Cochin China (South), as well as Cambodia. Laos was added in 1893, followed by Kwang-Chou-Wan (Guangzhouwan), a small enclave on the south coast of Qing China, in 1900.
15. Tsui, “Tsui Hark on Tsui Hark,” 175.
16. Ibid.
17. Ibid., 174.
22. Armes, Third World Filmmaking, 100.
24. Ibid., 28.
29. Ibid., 33.
30. Ibid., 31–2.
31. Ibid., 6, 10–1.
32. Ibid., 31.
42. Tan, “Ban(g)! Ban(g)!,” 96.
43. Ibid.
45. This idea derives from Jameson’s theory of the political unconscious which posits that cultural artifacts such as films constitute socially symbolic acts which narrate the ideological (re)production of a place or era and helps drive the formation of the political unconscious of that place or era. Fredric Jameson, The Political Unconscious: Narrative as a Socially Symbolic Act (London: Methuen, 1981).

46. The Chinese title of Diyu wumen extracts from the Chinese saying: “Hell has no gate (Diyu wumen), yet you force your way into it (Ni pianpian chuang jin lai).”

47. The maid is not a mute. She pretends to be one because Master Shum would kill her if he knows that she can “speak” his secrets.

Chapter 3

3. Shi Qi, Shi qi ying hua ji I: Xin lang chao bi ren la shangi (Xianggang: Ciwenhua youxian gongsi, 1999), 68.

11. This idea of the extimate intervenes by making the subjects of the community come face to face with the constitutive contradiction and lack of totality in their symbolic and imaginary orders and with what has been excluded and denied in the formation of its reality. This real incompleteness in mainstream culture is its internal limit, its extimate.

13. In the 1970s and 80s, more than 100,000 Vietnamese “boat people” lived in Hong Kong.

16. The future anterior imagination is an imagination of the present projected from an imagined future point of view.

18. Ibid., 190.

21. In the Deleuzian sense, qualitative time is an intense, momentary, disjunctive synthesis of qualitative changes that makes time felt as an irreversible passage no longer retrievable except as remembering of assemblages and traces.

23. Ibid.

27. In the Deleuzian sense, affective space is intensely invested with the desiring-productions and becomings of subjectivities. Therefore, it is both emotive and material, a conjunctive synthesis of temporal, spatial experiences all at once.

28. Both at its premier in the Hong Kong International Film Festival 2008 and the University of Hong Kong “Artist-in-Residence” program 2008 featuring Ann Hui, the young audience expressed contemplative interest in the film during the discussion sessions. They were surprised as much by the film’s touching ordinariness as by their own emotional investment.

Chapter 4

1. This interview was recorded on April 18, 2008, at the University of Hong Kong where Ann Hui served as artist-in-residence with Comparative Literature in the spring of that year. The editors would like to thank Patrick Luk Kar-yin for transcribing the interview.

2. The Moon or Mid-Autumn Festival is a traditional Chinese holiday devoted to family unity, symbolized by the eating of “moon cakes.” The community celebrates this festival with lanterns in an outdoor gathering to appreciate the full moon of the fall harvest. Images of the festival conclude The Way We Are.

3. Peggy Chiao is a film critic and producer based in Taipei. Chiao produced Stanley Kwan’s Still Love You After All These (1997) and Ann Hui’s As Time Goes By (co-director Vincent Chui, 1997) as personal reflections on Hong Kong’s return to Chinese sovereignty.

Chapter 5

2. I would like to thank Law Kar for facilitating my viewing of Patrick Tam’s television films at the Hong Kong Film Archive in July 2008. See Alberto Pezzotta, ed., Patrick Tam: From the Heart of the New Wave (Udine, Italy: Centro Espressioni Cinematografiche, 2007) for full details.

For auteur study of the New Wave directors, see Hong Kong New Wave: Twenty Years After (Hong Kong: The Provisional Urban Council of Hong Kong, 1999), also Pak-tong Cheuk, Hong Kong New Wave Cinema (1978–2000) (Bristol, UK: Intellect, 2008).

4. Interview with Patrick Tam, March 5, 2008, Festival Walk, Kowloon, Hong Kong.

5. Lui Tai-lok coined “Postwar Babies” in Hong Kong’s Four Generations as those who “took their positions with Hong Kong’s speedy social and economic developments.” (Hong Kong: Stepforward Multimedia Company Ltd., 2007), 31–2.

7. See Mary Wong, “Patrick Tam and ‘the New Woman,’” in Patrick Tam, 37–63.

9. Tam’s 1980s films’ box-office records were between HK $1.2 million (Love Massacre) and $5.7 million (Final Victory).

10. See Patrick Tam on Noel Burch’s influence in the interview.

14. See note 11.

17. The author thanks Patrick Tam for his generous gift of an interview, and for reading its transcriptions and answering additional questions in writing. This is an edited version.

18. See Leo Ou-fan Lee, “Classical Music in Patrick Tam’s After This, Our Exile,” HKinema: Hong Kong Film Critics Society Quarterly 3 (June, 2008): 13–4.

19. According to Hong Kong Filmography Volume IV (1953–59), 1,055 Cantonese films and 402 Mandarin films were produced during this period which included some of the best local productions in realism and melodrama (Hong Kong Film Archive, 2003).
20. Taiwan published the earliest Chinese translations of Albert Camus’ The Stranger and existentialism was popular among its university students in the 1960s.

22. Patrick Tam on the “After”: “[T]he thing ‘after’ is important. It is in retrospect, like memory … After all this, what has happened? How does the son react to his past history with his father? At the end, what is his mental and emotional state? … What we can be sure of is that the son is undergoing a sense of loss. He realizes that everything has passed. Whether he has love or deep feeling for his father, we can never know. He has emotional conflicts, and we can only leave him at that. I think this is the only truthful answer I can give to the film.” See Gina Marchetti, David Vivier, and Thomas Podvin, “Interview Patrick Tam: the Exiled Filmmaker,” Hong Kong Cinemagic, posted June 28, 2007, http://www.hkcinemagic.com/en/page.asp?aid=270&page=2 (accessed July 7, 2009).

23. Tam saw a Hong Kong of earlier years in Malaysia’s small towns. His Malaysia has been infused with a translocal consciousness. See After This Our Exile, Disc 3.

Chapter 6

2. Nancy Fraser, “Rethinking the Public Sphere: A Contribution to the Critique of Actually Existing Democracy,” in Habermas and the Public Sphere, ed. Craig Calhoun (Cambridge, MA: MIT Press, 1992), 120.

3. Ibid.

10. Ibid., 84.

13. Fraser, “Rethinking the Public Sphere,” 123.
14. Ibid.
15. See note 7 above.
23. Ackbar Abbas’s Hong Kong: Culture and the Politics of Disappearance (Hong Kong: Hong Kong University Press, 1997).
24. Leung Ping-kwan’s City at the End of Time is a bilingual edition of poetry co-edited and co-translated with Gordon T. Osing (Hong Kong: Department of Comparative Literature, University of Hong Kong & Twilight Books, 1992). Leung’s hugely important works focused attention on Hong Kong’s cultural plight, as a city where creative production became obsessed with the countdown to 1997, the uncertainty of being a postcolonial, yet not sovereign, “nation.”
28. Ibid., 41.
30. Evans Chan, Simon Chung Tak-sing, and Julian Lee Chi-chiu, Hong Kong Indie Films @ 27th HKIFF (Hong Kong: Ying E Chi, 2003).

Chapter 7

2. Ibid., 53.
3. Durian Durian is the first installment of Chan’s proposed “Prostitute Trilogy.” So far he has completed two films in this trilogy (the second film being Hollywood, Hong Kong) though it remains uncertain if he will ever complete the trilogy.
4. I have taken these words from the subtitles, though I feel at times the translation is not quite as accurate as it could be. For example, “money is a dream, a fantasy” I feel could be better translated as “money is a dream, an aim or ideal.”
5. Chachanteng refers to the Hong Kong–style cafeteria.
6. Bun mui is the derogatory Cantonese slang for Filipinas.
7. Renshe refers to the illegal immigrant from the Mainland.
9. Though Yau is also careful to note that this mythic notion of rural China presented in the film is undermined by tensions already evident in the rural village between the urban and the rural, the modern and the traditional. See of “Border Crossing,” 195–6. Coral’s home village is a refuge that is already in the throes of change.
10. Ibid., 195.
11. Biaojie refers to the elder female cousin and is used in Hong Kong to denote an older female from the Mainland.
14. There are moments when the parity between the two is disturbed: one, when Little Cheung deliberately gives Fan less than her share of tips and another small moment, when Fan, being taller, is able to ride an adult’s bike with greater ease than Little Cheung.
15. The use of the trope of friendship in Durian Durian functions slightly differently than in Little Cheung. In the latter, friendship is a way of connecting the binarily opposed Hong Kong and China. In Durian Durian, friendship highlights the geographical diversity of China as a nation and the bridges of friendship required to link Yan from the cold reaches of Northeastern China and Fan in the warm but humid south of China.
16. Though in Little Cheung, we do see Fan wandering beyond the safe confines of the alleyway with her Hong Kong friend, Cheung. In this film, Fan does get to experience more of Hong Kong, including a moment at the famed Hong Kong harbor.
17. The few times point-of-view shots do occur in the Hong Kong segment of the film are the moments between Yan and Fan — once as Yan takes a break in the alleyway while Fan spies on her out of curiosity and when both hide in the restaurant.
kitchen when the police appear in the alleyway. These shots help to cement the friendship between the two of them.

19. It is never made clear the reason behind Yan’s divorce. The audience is never sure if Xiao Ming, her ex-husband, ever finds out about her activities in Hong Kong. Nonetheless, he seems highly suspicious of Yan.

Chapter 8

1. Hong Kong/Hollywood at the Borders: Alternative Perspectives, Alternative Cinemas, Hong Kong Fulbright Program, the Hong Kong–American Center, the Hong Kong Film Archive, the Center for Asian Studies, the American Studies Program, and the Department of Comparative Literature of the University of Hong Kong, Hong Kong, April 1–5, 2004.

2. Nick Deocampo, Short Film: Emergence of a New Philippine Cinema (Manila: Communication Foundation for Asia, 1985).

Chapter 9

1. Gina Marchetti, one of the editors of this book, organized that conference, Hong Kong/Hollywood at the Borders: Alternative Perspectives, Alternative Cinemas, Hong Kong Fulbright Program, the Hong Kong–American Center, the Hong Kong Film Archive, the Center for Asian Studies, the American Studies Program, and the Department of Comparative Literature of the University of Hong Kong, Hong Kong, April 1–5, 2004.

2. Since 1997, Hong Kong has functioned as a Special Administrative Region of the People’s Republic of China. Under the policy of “one country, two systems,” the Central People’s government is responsible for the territory’s defense and foreign affairs, while the government of Hong Kong is responsible for its own legal system, police force, monetary system, customs policy, immigration policy, and delegates to international organizations and events. See “Hong Kong,” Wikipedia, http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Hong_Kong (accessed July 20, 2009).

3. The Chinese phrase xin lu li qing literally translates as “heart-road-experience-journey” in English. Xin lu can be translated as “heart-road.” I chose to excerpt this popular phrase from Chinese as the title for my media project because I found its inter-cutting (to use a cinematic allusion here) of the bodily experience with the metaphor of travel to be an apt summary for what I explore in the project.

4. “Handover fever” refers to the attention and excitement generated by the British handover of Hong Kong to Communist Chinese rule.
5. From the voice-over in Myth(s) of Creation (1997) by Ming-Yuen S. Ma, 17 minutes, video.
6. The “ruin” in question is the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel. The ghost is one that is believed to haunt Room 928 in the hotel. He was a well-known Hollywood actor, and for that reason, his identity is not revealed in the video or in this essay.
8. At first, these were mistakes during the output process in digital video editing, when insufficient memory in the system caused the picture to freeze (i.e. a freeze-frame); I soon adopted these accidents as a formal device and started to create my own freeze-frames.
10. Marchetti, From Tian’anmen to Times Square, 9.
12. Ibid., 362–3.
13. Fen . Ma Liuming is the nom d’art that Chinese body artist Ma Liuming assumes in his performances. Fen . Ma Liuming always appears naked and in full make-up. Ma’s androgynous features, accentuated by the make-up and his long hair, create a gender illusion that Fen . Ma Liuming is a woman, an illusion that his naked male body disrupts. In this persona, Ma performs different actions and situations, such as in Fen . Ma Liuming Walks on the Great Wall, an action documented in video and photographs, where Ma Liuming is shown putting on make-up in the beginning of the video, then as Fen . Ma Liuming s/he walks on an unspecified section of the Great Wall of China, generally alone, but occasionally interacting with a few tourists. The character “fen” in Fen . Ma Liuming means “fragrance” in Chinese, but is a homonym for “separation” as well, thereby extending Ma’s play on gender ambiguity and identity into the naming of his performance persona itself. In Chinese, Fen . Ma Liuming is often typeset with a period between the characters “fen” and “ma,” which I have followed in my writing. The name is sometimes listed as Fen-Ma Liuming in English.
15. As I mentioned in note 11, Ma seems to be putting on make-up in the beginning of the video, in my view a literal “putting on oneself” in his becoming of Fen. Ma Liuming — his performance art persona. Ma created this persona while living in the East Village, an impoverished artist community in Beijing formed in the 1990s, after the government crackdown of the pro-democracy movement in Tiananmen Square and the subsequent state persecution of artistic and other non-state-sanctioned means of expression.

18. “Wherever she goes she is asked to show her identity papers. What side does she speak up for? Where does she belong (politically, economically)? Where does she place her loyalty (sexually, ethnically, professionally)? Should she be met at the center, where they invite her in with much display, it is often only to be reminded that she holds the permanent status of a ‘foreigner worker,’ ‘a migrant,’ or ‘a temporary sojourner’ — a status necessary to the maintenance of a central power.” From Trinh T. Minh-ha, “Cotton and Iron,” in When the Moon Waxes Red: Representation, Gender, and Cultural Politics (New York: Routledge, 1991), 18.

19. Besides Trinh, Gilles Deleuze and Félix Guattari also proposed an explicitly nomadic subject position in their book, A Thousand Plateaus: Capitalism and Schizophrenia, trans. Brian Massumi (Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1987). Other post-Structuralist thinkers, such as Hélène Cixous, have argued more generally for destabilizing a static sense of identity.

20. See Ackbar Abbas, Hong Kong: Culture and the Politics of Disappearance (Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1997).

21. Homi Bhabha, “DissemiNation: Time, Narrative and the Margins of the Modern Nation,” in The Location of Culture (London: Routledge, 1994); quoted in From Tiananmen to Times Square, 188.
Chapter 10

1. The material presented in this chapter is derived from two interviews with Tammy Cheung conducted on October 8, 2004 and June 14, 2007. This chapter was part of Esther M. K. Cheung’s two projects on Hong Kong independent filmmaking funded by two grants: “Seed Funding for Basic Research” of the University of Hong Kong and the “General Research Fund” of Research Grants Council of the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, China (Project No. HKU 7416/05H). We would like to thank Michelle Kwok and Luna Ngai for helping us to compile, transcribe, and edit the interviews.

Chapter 11

1. This interview took place on January 26, 2005 when Evans Chan was visiting the Department of Comparative Literature, University of Hong Kong.

Chapter 12

4. Ibid., 286.
7. Ibid.

15. Ibid.

16. Ibid., 5.

22. Film critic Po Sharp’s review on Ordinary Heroes as cited in Chu, “Hybridity and (G)local Identity,” 323.

23. Chu, “Hybridity and (G)local Identity,” 323.

Chapter 13

5. See Chapter 1 by Esther M. K. Cheung for a reading of Centre Stage in light of Kwan’s sexual orientation.

7. Hold You Tight has a lot of features in common with other New Wave films made between 1984 and 1997 that Ackbar Abbas has characterized as a cinema of “disappearance.” Given the “deadline” Hong Kong was living under, many of these films seem preoccupied with time, memory, and loss. See Ackbar Abbas, Hong Kong: Culture and the Politics of Disappearance (Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1997).

14. In fact, Moon and Fung Wai are shown shopping for their sofa at Ikea.

20. See note 8 above. For further discussion of the use of the Tsing Ma Bridge as metaphor, see Lim, Celluloid Comrades and Ho, “Reinterpreting a Queer Experience.”

22. Lim, Celluloid Comrades, 163.

23. See Lim, Celluloid Comrades; Ho, “Reinterpreting a Queer Experience”; and Leung, “Queerscape”.

Chapter 14

1. Interview conducted on November 24, 2005. My thanks to Patrick Luk Kar-yin for transcribing this interview.
2. For more information on the film, visit its website at http://members.aol.com/hoyuk/.

Chapter 15

1. Parts of this chapter have appeared in Libidoc: Journeys in the Performance of Sex Art (Ljubljana: Maska Publications, 2005).
5. This issue was recently addressed in the workshop “Methodologies for Internet Research” for the Society for Cinema and Media Studies, London, England, March 31–April 3, 2005.

Chapter 16

7. To date Ann Hui has directed twenty-four works, beginning with The Secret (1979).

13. “The mahjong scene (one of my favorite scenes) was inspired by a caller on my show who was the fourth person invited to play mahjong for this kinky bastard. Many of my sexual fantasy images were maybe real for someone and eventually became fantasy in the film. It’s all those swimming thoughts.” Interview with filmmaker.

Chapter 17

1. Wimal Dissanayake, “The Class Imaginary in Fruit Chan’s Films,” Jump Cut 49 (2007), http://www.ejumpcut.org/archive/jc49.2007/FruitChan-class/text.html (accessed December 13, 2009). As Dissanayake observes, “Despite the fact some of the early Hong Kong films dealt with social injustice, inequities, and the gap between rich and poor, Hong Kong cinema has rarely taken as its theme the concept of class. Only with the work of Fruit Chan do we begin to see the persuasive articulation of class in cinematic terms.”

4. Ibid., 121.

5. Ibid., 126. As Tasker points out, “If in the early 1970s the sexually independent, working woman heroine of new noir is figured as a working girl (that is as a prostitute), it is increasingly common in the 1990s to find her in a business suit.”

7. Ibid., 154.
9. Dissanayake reads the featuring of the mainland Chinese prostitutes in Chan’s films as a reflection of the “problem” of the Hong Kong society after the reunification: “Fruit Chan sees the new political landscape created by the union of Hong Kong and China in somewhat negative terms. For the proletariat, Chan seems to be saying, the new linkages between Hong Kong and the mother country have not visibly improved their quality of living, but only precipitated greater conflict. The Chinese immigrants who come to Hong Kong to work as prostitutes exemplify this problem, and they also reveal that the transnationalization of labor is a result of globalization.” He also believes that Chan is sympathetic in his portrayals of migrant workers such as the mainland Chinese prostitutes. While I agree with Dissanayake that Chan can be sympathetic to the mainland prostitute characters, it is also undeniable that Chan has particularly highlighted the exploitative aspect of Tung Tung’s practice of prostitution and blackmauling.
12. Dissanayake argues that Chan’s films are all fantastic because “he sees fantasy as a way of extending the discursive range of realism.”
13. The skinny Keung is like the Monkey King who cannot escape from the confinement underneath the Five Fingers Mountain which is represented by the five high rises; the Chus are the pigs; and the girl in red is the seductive White Bone Spirit.
15. Dissanayake also pays special attention to the representation of bodies in Chan’s films and rightly points out that in his films “the human body should be appreciated as a locus of economic, social, political, cultural, and legal inscriptions and representations.”
17. Tsung-yi Michelle Huang insightfully observes that Hong Kong is a global city of dual compression. She analyzes the dual characters of the city with examples of two types of high rises, the skyscrapers in Central, representing the global compression, and the housing projects, exemplifying the local compression. Huang points out that Hong Kong thus “illustrates Sassen’s dual city vistas — the transnational corporations’ monumental skyscrapers surrounded by jam-packed public housing point to an ever-widening gap between the dazzling representational space for the global flows and the hyper-dense representation of space for the local people.” See Tsung-yi Michelle Huang, Walking Between Slums and Skyscrapers: Illusions of Open Space in Hong Kong, Tokyo, and Shanghai (Hong Kong: Hong Kong University Press, 1997).
Press, 2004), 29. I would argue that the architectural differences between Hollywood Plaza and Tai Hom Village in Hollywood Hong Kong bring in an even sharper contrast between the dual faces of Hong Kong as well as a sense of “time lag” between an (over)developed/urbanized space and an undeveloped/semi-rural one that coexist at the same time and side by side.

18. Dumplings is one of three Asian horror shorts from Three … Extremes; the other two is Box by the Japanese director Takashi Miike and Cut by Korean filmmaker Park Chan-wook. There are two versions of Dumplings, one is the forty-minute short tale included in Three … Extremes and the other is a ninety-minute feature film. What I am referring to in this essay is the feature film version.

Index

{os} (2007) 145, 147
I:99 (2003) 102
2046 (2004) 21, 23–4

Abbas, Ackbar 20, 149, 176–7, 259
Abrams, M. H. 175, 178
accented cinema 12, 35, 39, 41–2, 264
Aces Go Places III (1984) 34, 36, 45 acousmatic voices 12, 19–21, 24–5, 32
acoustmètre 19–21, 23, 28
activism 146, 177, 189, 191
Adeus Macau (2000) 166, 180, 186–7
After the Crescent (1997) 102
After This Our Exile (2006) 75–6, 80–3, 88–91
Ab Kam (1996) 51
Ahmad, Yasmin 141
All the Wrong Clues (For the Right Solution) (1981) 34, 36, 45
All Tomorrow’s Parties (2003) 103
Allen, Woody 128, 153
alter-ego 226, 250
Amorous Woman of the Tang Dynasty, An (1984) 9
Anderson, Benedict 1, 97 anti-colonial 39, 43
anti-Communism 55
anti-subversion legislation (a.k.a. Article 23) 96, 102
Antonioni, Michelangelo 84
Appadurai, Arjun 1
Arch, The (1970) 5
As Time Goes By (1997) 7
Ashes of Time (1994) 21, 23, 80
Asian CineVision (ACV) 127, 130, 132, 134, 138
Au, Tony 115–6
auteur 51, 53, 76, 104, 198–9
auteurism 4, 86
Autumn Moon (1992) 20
avant-garde 1, 12–4, 68, 99, 127–30, 132, 135, 166, 169, 171, 240

Bamboo House of Dolls, The (1973) 10
Banquet, The (2006) 52
Bauhinia (2002) 166
Below the Lion Rock 177, 187
Bergman, Ingmar 83, 173, 180, 183
Bernal, Ishmael 141
Besieged City (2008) 64
Biaojie 117
Big Hit, The (1998) 127, 136
Bishonen (1998) 10
Blade Runner (1982) 136
Index

Boat People (1982) 51, 70
boat people 54–5, 166, 181, 189
border consciousness 41, 48

Bowling For Columbine (2002) 179
Brecht, Bertolt 179–80, 190
Brechtian 181, 190
Breillet, Catherine 241
Bresson, Robert 83–4

Bridge, The (1978) 188
Brocka, Lino 138

Brokeback Mountain (2005) 204, 212
Broomfield, Nick 175, 179

Bun mui 113
Buñuel, Luis 37
Burch, Noel 84, 86, 192

Burning Snow (1988) 79
Butterfly (2004) 10
Butterfly Murders, The (1979) 34, 36, 45–8

Cageman (1992) 188–9
Campion, Jane 241
capitalism 39–40, 52, 125, 176, 211, 221, 239, 241, 245

Capitalism — A Love Story (2009) 176

Carla’s Song (1993) 187
Category III 2, 9, 141, 211, 220,
Category IV 221

Cathy Come Home (1966) 187

Center Stage (a.k.a. Actress, 1991) 28–30, 51

chachanteng 112
Chan, Evans 2, 6, 7, 12, 13, 108, 110, 165–74, 179–87, 190
Chan, Fruit 6–8, 12–4, 17, 20, 24–7, 99, 111–25, 171, 188, 253–62
Chan, Jackie 242
Chan, Joyce 78
Chan, Lai-wun 72, 64
Chan, Lindzay 182
Chan, Peter 52, 107

Chan, Sammy Kam-hung 200
Chan, Yuk-lin 72
Chang, Chen (a.k.a. Zhang Zhen) 203
Chang, Sylvia 242
Chang, Terence Ga-jan 136
Chang, Tseng-chai 10

Checkpoint (2003) 100
Chen, Kaige 139
Chen, Shui-bian 204, 212
Chen, Yu-hsin 10
Cherié (1984) 79
Cheung, Alex 17, 75
Cheung, Alfred 116
Cheung, Bryan Wai-Hung 02
Cheung, Jacky 63
Cheung, Jacob 188–9
Cheung, Leslie 10, 23, 51, 75
Cheung, Mabel 9, 80
Cheung, Maggie 28–9, 51, 63
Cheung, Tammy 6, 13, 73, 151–64, 177
Cheung, William Suk-ping 80 chi 131
Chiao, Peggy 7, 30, 73
Chicago, Judy 240
Chin, Han 28
Chinese diaspora 8, 9, 17, 81, 181, 215
Chinese diasporan 38–9, 43, 48
Chineseness 106, 215
Ching, Tony Siu-tung 80
Chion, Michel 19, 23
Chor, Yuen 9
Chow, Bernardo Man-kei 185
Chow, Selina Leung Suk-yi 4
Choy, Christine 80
Chui, Vincent 2, 6–7, 159–60, 167
Chung, Simon Tak-sing 104

Chungking Express (1994) 21–3, 25,
CID (1976) 75
cinéma verité 177

City of Sadness (1989) 202–3, 206, 208–9
Cogon (2005) 127
Collier, Joelle 255
colonial 26, 38–9, 42–9, 55–7, 59–60, 104–9, 144, 186, 201, 203, 220, 222
colonizer 52, 56, 60, 62, 106
Communism 37, 54–5, 205
Cordero, Maria 217
cosmopolitanism 5, 12, 18, 32
countercinema/counter-cinema 100, 179, 213
counterpublic 95–6, 98–101, 106, 110
Crossings (1995) 166, 171–2
Cultural Heritage Commission (CHC) 101–2
Cultural Revolution 10–1, 39, 215 culturalism 42–3
cybersex 218, 225, 227, 229–38
Dali, Salvador 37
Dangerous Encounters — 1st Kind (1980–81) 17, 34, 36, 43–8
Dare Ya (2002) 80
Darkness Bride (2003) 171
Days of Being Wild (1990) 21, 23–4, 75, 80
De l’origine du XXle Siècle (2000) 181
Deadknot (1969) 110, 187
decolonization 40, 169
découpage 86, 79
déjà disparu 149
Deleuze, Gilles 147
Diary of a Shinjuku Thief’ (1968) 83
Diasporama: Dead Air (1997) 215–6
Diaz-Abay, Marilou 141
direct cinema 6, 151, 153–4
Disciples, The (2000) 127
dissemiNation 111
Doane, Mary Ann 254
docu-drama 51, 54, 180, 187, 189, 192 documentary 6, 19, 28, 30–1, 72–3, 80, 120, 127, 134, 137, 151–2, 155, 157–60, 163, 166, 168–9, 172, 175, 177–82, 184–5, 187–92, 214–6, 242
Dogma 7
Doyle, Christopher 80
Dragons Forever (1988) 242
dui dao 23
Dumplings (2004) 260
Dust in the Wind (1986) 169
DV/digital video 2, 63, 137–8, 141, 160, 166, 172–3
Eat Drink Man Woman (1994) 63
Election (Dir. Johnnie To, 2005) 80
Election (Dir. Tammy Cheung, 2005) 151
Enchanting Shadow, The (1960) 83
Erens, Patricia Brett 9, 179, 239–51
essai 178
essay film 4, 13, 129, 166, 175–93
Eurocentrism 40, 52
Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Sex, But Were Afraid to Ask (1972) 128
exhibitionism 236
exile 27, 41, 49, 53, 57–8, 60–2, 89–92, 147–8, 215 existentialism 84
experimental cinema 2, 128
experimental director/experimental filmmaker 3, 8, 137–8 experimental documentary 127, 192, 215, 221 experimental filmmaking 128, 135, 138, 240
Index

Father and Son (1981) 7, 88
Fear of Intimacy (2004) 159, 167
Fellini, Federico 173
female gaze 243, 245
femininity 14, 257, 261, feminism 29, 100, 215, 225, 246, feminist 53, 209, 213, 215, 240–3, 246, 250–1
feminist filmmakers 9
feminist filmmaking 240
femme fatale 253–5, 257, 260–2
Feng, Pin-chia 6, 253–62
Feng, Xiaogang 52
fetish 227, 229, 239
Fifth Generation 139, 164, 206
Film Biweekly 4, 131, 214 film noir 36, 254–255
Final Victory (1987) 79
flâneur 77–8, 192
flexible citizenship 2, 33, 35, 38, 258
Flow (1993) 215
Focus: First Cuts (2006) 8
Fong, Allen 75, 88, 91, 19, 139, 177
Fong, Eddie Ling-ching 9, 80
Fraser, Nancy 96, 98, 100, 105–6
French New Wave 4, 87, 101, 181, 187
From the Queen to the Chief Executive (2001) 191–3
Fu Bo (2003) 103
Full Moon in New York (1989) 199, 208
Gan, Wendy 6, 13, 111–25
Garcia, Roger 4, 12–3, 82, 127–42 gay film 30, 197–8, 200
gay sexuality 199,
genre 10, 17, 34, 35–6, 38, 49, 51–2, 54, 66–8, 75, 79, 80, 85–6
Gettino, Octavio 39–40
Ghost (2006) 179
Girlfriends (1978) 240
globalism 42–3
Godard, Jean-Luc 77, 83–5, 87, 100,
170, 173, 175, 179–81
Golden Harvest 5, 34, 79, 156
Goodbye, Dragon Inn (2003)
Guillen, Laurice 141
Ha Ha Shanghai (2001) 80
Habermas, Jürgen 96–8, 100, 105
Hagedorn, Jessica 4, 13, 127–42
Happy Together (1997) 10, 82, 197, 203,
205
Hawks, Howard 83
He Ain’t Heavy, He’s My Brother (1993)
107
Health Warning (1983) 136
Her Fatal Ways (1990) 116–7
Hero (2002) 52
Hester Street (1975) 240
heterosexuality 210, 211
high definition/HD 71–3, 138, 172
High School (1968) 154
Hitchcock, Alfred 83
Ho, Cheri Pui-yee 185
Ho, Meng-hua 10
Ho Yuk: Let’s Love Hong Kong (2002) 10,
13, 213, 216–22
Hold You Tight (1998) 5, 10, 13, 197–212
home video 63, 173
Homecoming (1984) 116, 118, 121 homelessness 17–8, 27, 41, 45, 81 homo-economicus 25
homoeROTICISM 187, 200
homophobia 197, 201, 204
homosexuality 11, 30, 31, 145, 199,
201–2, 205, 209, 218, 222
Hong Kong Arts Centre 101, 103, 128,
156, 158, 161, 214–5, 217
Hong Kong Arts Development Council (ADC) 5–6, 97, 101, 103, 157, 167, 215, 221
Hong Kong Asian Film Festival (HKAFF) 5
Hong Kong Asian Independent Film Festival (HKAIFF) 5
Hong Kong Connection 73, 163
Hong Kong Independent Short Film and Video Awards (IFVA) 5, 216
Hong Kong International Film Festival (HKIFF) 5, 67, 109, 128–9, 139, 214, 220
Hong Kong Lesbian and Gay Film Festival 5, 222
Hong Kong New Wave 2–5, 7, 12–3, 17, 43, 51, 67, 69, 75–6, 91, 106, 129, 139, 176–7, 198, 206
Hooper, Ted 37
Hou, Hsiao-hsien 139, 169, 202, 208
Hour of the Wolf (Vargtimmen, 1968) 83
Hu, Jun 31
Hu, King 86
Hui, Ann 4, 7, 19, 12, 17, 20, 51–74, 91, 106, 108–9, 129, 139, 141, 171, 177, 187–90, 240 hybrid documentary 169 hyper-sexuality 260
imperialism 39–40
Impossibility of Having Sex with 500 Men in a Month—I'm an Oriental Whore, The 227–38
In the Cut (2003) 241
In the Face of Demolition (1953) 83
In the Mood for Love (2000) 21, 23
In the Realm of the Senses (1976) 87
Incidental Journey (2001)
Inconvenient Truth, An (2006) 175 independent cinema 6, 12, 14, 95–110, 129, 139, 159, 160, 166, 213 independent filmmaker 7, 8, 13, 99, 103, 128, 140, 142, 161, 167–8, 172, 253 independent filmmaking 6, 8, 9, 51, 128, 139, 140, 142, 166, 167 indies 3, 10, 99, 101–3, 110, 156, 160
Infernal Affairs (2002–03) 160
Ingham, Mike 4, 7, 13, 48, 166, 175–93
Is There Anything Specific You Would Like Me to Tell You About? (1990) 214
It Was a Cold Winter Night (1955) 83
Jacobs, Katrien 11, 225–38
Jade Goddess of Mercy (2003) 171
Jameson, Fredric 41, 145
Jancso, Miklos 84
Jaws (1975) 37
Je vous salue, Sarajevo (1993) 181
Jia, Zhangke 7, 99, 103
Jiang Hu (2004) 159
Joint Declaration 105–6, 255
Journey to Beijing (1998) 166, 180, 182, 184
July (2004) 151, 155, 157–9, 164, 177
July Rhapsody (2001) 51, 63
Kaneshiro, Takeshi 21
Kawase, Naomi 141
Kempton, Nicole 8, 13, 95–110, 151–74
Kieslowski, Krzysztof 170
Klopfenstein, Clemens 127
Kluge, Alexander 84, 97–8
KMT/Guomindang 117, 204, 208, 212
Ko, Clifton Chi-sum 69
Ko, Yue-lin 200
Koo, Colette 220
Kuei, Chih-hung 10
Kuhle Wampe (1932) 179
Kurosawa, Akira 173
Kwan, Stanley 5, 7, 10, 12–3, 17, 20, 28–31, 51, 63, 73, 80, 104, 106, 176, 197–212
Kwok, Aaron 81
Kwok, Crystal 2, 8–9, 12, 14, 239, 244, 249
Kwok, William Wai-lun 160, 171

La Mouche (1974) 129
Lady of Mystery, The (1957) 83
Lai, Carol Miu-suet 6
Lai, Man-wai 177, 192
laissez-faire 42–3, 45
Lam, Erica 217, 219–20
Lan Yu (2001) 10, 30–1, 199–200
Lau, Andrew 8
Lau, Andy 8
Lau, Carina 29
Lau, Jeff 20
Lau, Lawrence Kwok-cheung 64, 188
Law, Clara 9, 17, 20, 80, 240
Law, Wai-ming 131
Leaving in Sorrow (2002) 7
Lee, Amy 151–64
Lee, Ang 9, 63, 204, 212
Lee, Hannah 141
Lee, Julian Chi-chiu 104
Lee, Kang-sheng 1
Lee, Sam 24
lesbian film 198
lesbianism 13, 218, 239, 245
Leung, Isaac 2, 11, 14, 225–38
Leung, Juno Chun-lung 64, 72
Leung, Tony 21, 24, 82, 203
Leung, Tony Ka-fai 167
Lewis, Joseph H. 139
LGBT 10–1, 197–9, 204, 212, 222
Li, Han-hsiang 10, 86
Li, Mark Ping-bin 89
Li, Wenders Tung-chuen 24
Lin, Brigitte 22
Little Cheung (1999) 7, 25–6, 111–8, 120, 125
Liu, Chia-hui (Gordon Lau) 131
Liu, Chia-liang 131
Liu, Jerry 131
Liu, Ye 31
Loach, Ken 187
localism 18, 43
Lotus Lamp, The (1965) 10
Love Eterne, The (1963) 10
Love Is Elsewhere (2008) 6
Love Massacre (1981) 79, 88
Lynch, David 153
Ma, Ming-Yuen S. 2, 11, 13, 143–50
Ma, Victor Choi-wo 185
Macao, Oder Die Rückseite des Meeres (1986) 127
Madame White Snake (1962) 10
Made in Hong Kong (1997) 24–25
mahjong
Maid from Heaven, A (1964) 10
Mak, Anson 192
Mak, Antonio Hin-yeung 132
Mak, Johnnie 80
Mak, Wai-fan 26
Mak, Yan-yan 6, 10
Malaya Love Affair (1955) 83
male gaze 239, 245
Mambo Girl (1957) 83
Man on the Brink (1981) 17
Marchetti, Gina 1–14, 67–74, 82, 143, 147, 150, 179, 197–223
Marker, Chris 175, 180 martial arts 36, 47, 52, 66, 75, 85, 87, 91, 239
marxism 71
Mary from Beijing (1992) 242
Master, The (1992) 242
materialism 114–5
matrophobia 59–61
Media Asia 70, 131
memoir film 7, 73
Merry Christmas Mr. Lawrence (1983) 152
Miao, Cora 57
mise-en-scene 17, 34, 36, 63, 77, 79, 86, 207
Mistress, The (1999) 14, 239–51
Mistula (1987) 133
Mo, Comyn 127–28, 131, 133
Modern Films 2, 13, 127–8, 130, 132, 134–7
Mok, Chiu-yu 109, 186–7, 190
Moore, Michael 155, 172–3, 175–6, 179
Mother/Land (2000)
Motorcycle Diaries (2004) 170
Moulin Rouge (2001) 52
Movements East-West (2003) 146–9
Moving (2003) 151
Mu, Fei 170
Mui, Anita 51, 63
My Heart Is the Eternal Rose (1988) 79
Myth(s) of Creation (1997) 144, 148
Naficy, Hamid 12, 35, 39, 41
Naked Killer (1992) 211
narrative film 151, 169, 185, 189
nationalism 11, 18, 35, 42–3, 54, 60, 209
Negt, Oskar 97–8
neo-imperialism 40, 43–5, 117, 186 neo-liberalism 25, 31–2
New Queer Cinema 3, 9–10, 197–8
Ng, Charles Shing-foon 129
Ng, Lawrence Kai-wah 28
Ng, Sandra 209
Nomad (1982) 75, 79, 87
nostalgia 12, 29, 56, 91, 107, 123, 219
O, Sing-Pui 102
O’Keefe, Georgia 240
Oh, Jungwan 141
one country, two systems 103, 202–3, 258
One Way Street on a Turntable (2007) 192–3
Ong, Aihwa 25, 38, 43
Oshima, Nagisa 79, 83, 87, 152
otaku 64
Our Sister Hedy (1957) 83
Ozu, Yasujiro 66
Pacific Film Archive 84
Panhottivorakul, Thunska 127, 134
Pau, Hei-ching 64, 72
Perhaps Love (2005) 52
Phantom of the Opera (2004) 52
Phillips, Lou Diamond 127
Phoenix Cine Club 4, 128–9, 214
Pierrot Le Fou (1965) 87
Police Story 2 (1988) 242
Pontianak Harum Sundal Malam (2004) 141 pornography 225–6, 241, 245 post-1997 6, 102, 111, 205, 262
postcolonial 25, 39, 53, 96, 107, 212, 228
Preminger, Otto 83
Princess Fragrance (1987) 66 pseudo-science 225–6, 232, 238 public sphere 4, 8, 96–102, 104–7, 110, 213
Puppetmaster, The (1993) 169
qi gong 131
Qin, Hailu 26
qiging movies 10
queer/ku-er 9–11, 13–4, 197–9, 200–5, 209–13, 218, 226
queer sexuality 14
Queer Story, A (1997) 10, 201
queerscape 197, 213, 226
Index

racism 152
Radio Television Hong Kong (RTHK) 72–3, 163, 187
Rambling Rose (1991) 240
Ray, Satyajit 84
realism 12, 63, 69, 71, 79, 82, 90, 155, 177, 188
Red, Raymond 127–8, 133, 135
Red Shoes, The (1948) 206
Rhythm (1980) 128
Rice Distribution (2002) 151, 156, 162–3
River, The (1997) 203
Road, The (a.k.a. The Big Road, 1934) 130
Roger and Me (1989) 172–3
Romance (1999) 241
Romance of Book and Sword, The (1987) 66
Rouge (1987) 51, 106, 199
Ruan, Lingyu 28–30, 51
Salles, Walter 170
Sand (1986) 127, 132, 137
sci-fi 36, 219
scopophilia 254–6
Scott, Ridley 136
Second Wave Feminism 240, 254
Secondary School (2002) 151, 153–4, 156, 158–9, 162, 164
Secret, The (1979) 17, 66, 68–9
Seeing (1985)
Seven Women (1976) 75–8, 85
sex artist 225–6, 229
Sex for Sale (1974) 10
sexual orientation 9, 11, 197–9, 202–3, 209, 217, 232–3 sexual repression 228, 247
sexuality 2, 10, 13–4, 28, 30, 77, 103, 197–8, 203, 205, 211, 225–9, 239–43, 250, 254–5, 261–2
Shamir, Yoav 160
Shaw Brothers 5, 7, 85
Shi, Nansun 34
Shohat, Ella 40–2
Shu Kei 8, 10, 79, 201
Shum, Jim 127–33, 137
Siao, Josephine 62
Sicko (2003) 176
Significant Other 31, 98, 101
silent film 28–30
Simmel, Georg 17–8, 23
Sinocentrism 52
Sirk, Douglas 139
Six Films by Comyn Mo (1984) 128, 131
Sixth Generation 1, 3, 12, 98–9, 101, 103, 124
Sixth Sense, The (1999) 19
Social Worker (1977) 75
Solanas, Fernando 39–40
Song of the Exile (1990) 51, 58–61, 73
Spacked Out (2000) 188
Speaking Up (2005) 151, 155, 161
Spielberg, Steven 37, 43
Spooky Bunch (1980) 66, 68
Springtime in a Small Town (1948) 170
Spurlock, Morgan 175, 179
Stam, Robert 40–2
Still Love You After All These (1997) 7, 10, 30, 199
strangerhood 5, 17–8, 20–1, 23, 25–6, 32, 98
Straub, Jean-Marie 84
Summer Snow (1995) 51, 62, 66
Sun, Yu 130
Superstar Specials (1975) 75, 78
Surfside (1984) 128
surrealism 34–7, 44, 47
Sword, The (1980) 79, 85–6, 88
Swordsman II and III (1992–93) 10
Szeto, Mirana M. 4, 7, 12, 51–66
Index 295

Taiwan New Cinema 198, 206
Taiwan New Wave 208
Takuya, Kimura 24
Tam, Amy Ka-chuen 24
Tam, Patrick 4, 12–3, 75–92, 129, 139, 177
Tan, Louis 80
Tan, See-Kam 1–14, 33–49, 67–74
Tang, Shu-shuen 5, 9
Tanner, Alain 84
Taylor, Charles 3, 8, 31, 97
Tchaikovsky, Pyotr 83
Television Broadcasts Limited (TVB) 72, 75, 85
Temptation of a Monk (1993) 240
Texas Chainsaw Massacre, The (1974) 37
Third Cinema 12, 39–42, 106
Third Wave Feminism 106
Third World filmmaking 12, 38–40
Thirteen (1977) 75, 79
Thompson, Peter 175, 179
Tiananmen 111, 115, 169, 181–3, 185–6, 190–1, 208–9, 215
Till We Meet Again (1991) 116
To, Johnnie 80
To Liv(e) (1991) 166, 171–2, 180–3, 193
tongzhi 10–1, 201, 205, 209, 212
Total Blackout (1979) 129
Touch of Zen, A (1972) 86
trans-sexuality 201
Trinh, Minh-ha 149
Tsai, Ming-liang 203
Tsang, Eric 8, 200–1, 205
Tsui, Hark 33, 38, 40
Tuesday Night 72
Tung Fung Hung/The East Is Red 129, 257
Twin Bracelets, The (1990) 10

Ullmann, Liv 166, 181
Un Chien Andalou (1928) 37
Underdogs, The (1977) 75
urbanism 18

Videotage 214
Visible Secret (2001) 66
Vive l’amour (1994) 203
voice-over 19–21, 24, 28, 30–1, 47, 112, 117, 119–20, 144, 151, 154, 182, 184, 187, 260
Voodoo Girls (2002) 134

Wahlberg, Mark 127, 136
Wang, Xiaohuai 8
Warhol, Andy 129, 134, 136
Warlords, The (2007) 52
Warner, Michael 98–9, 105
We’re Going to Eat You (1980) 33–4, 37, 46
Wedding Banquet, The (1993) 9
Wiseman, Frederick 153–4
Wizard of Oz, The (1939) 19
Women’s Private Parts (2001) 141
Wong, Anthony 189
Wong, Barbara 141
Wong, Ching-po 103
Wong, Chung-ching 217, 220
Wong, Jing 69, 198, 211
Wong, Kar-wai 5, 9–10, 12, 17, 20–2, 51, 63, 69, 75, 80–1, 171, 176, 197, 203, 205, 221
Wong, Kirk Chi-keung 136, 139
Woo, John 4, 13, 127–42
Woo, John (a.k.a. Ng Yue-sam) 80, 110, 128, 136, 187
Wu, Nien-jen 7, 169
Wu, Zhongxian (a.k.a. Ng Chung-yin) 108–9, 186–7, 190

Xin Lu (video project) 144–9
Yang, Edward 139

Yau, Ching 2, 9–11, 12–3, 213–23

Yau, Chingmy 198, 200, 210–1

Yau, Esther C. M. 4, 12–3, 75–92

Yau, Herman 7, 12, 191

Yee, Kenneth Chung-man 80

Yellow Earth (1984) 139–40

Yim, Ho 116, 121, 129, 139

Yim, Neiky 24

yin yang 36

Ying E Chi 7, 103–4, 159, 168

Yiu, Yuet-ming 25

Yon, Fan 9, 10

Yu, Nelson Lik-wai 7, 103

Yu, Ronny Yan-tai 139

Yueh, Feng 10

Yung, Danny 130, 133

Zhang, Yimou 52, 139, 247

Zhang, Yuan 8

Zhou, Xun 257

Zu: Warriors from the Magic Mountain (1983) 34, 36, 45–6, 48, 66

Zuni Icosahedron 130